This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

BOARD ELECTION NOTICE.

The annual stockholders' meeting of the Law Reporter Company of Washington City will be held at the office of the company, 518 Fifth street northwest, on Monday, January 9, 1905, for the purpose of electing nine directors to serve for the ensuing year. Polls open from 12 m. to 1 p. m. H. RANDALL WEBB, Secretary.

DECISIONS BY THE COURT OF APPEALS.

Incorporations; Subch. 4, Chap. 18, Code D. C., Construed.

An important decision construing certain provisions of subchapter 4 of chapter 18 of the District Code, embodying the general incorporation law of this District, was rendered January 4, 1905, in the case of John C. Dancy, Recorder of Deeds, v. Horace F. Clark. The appeal was from an order of the court below directing the issue of a writ of mandamus to compel the recorder to receive for record a certificate of incorporation presented by the relators and which had been rejected by that officer on the ground that it contemplated that the proposed corporation should engage in five several classes of business, instead of one separate and independent enterprise, to which it was claimed by the recorder—whose view in that regard was sustained by the Attorney-General of the United States—the provisions of the Code governing incorporations restricted them. The decision of the court below, which is reversed by the Court of Appeals, held that the recorder was merely a ministerial officer, without authority to pass upon the question, and having no discretion but to receive and record the certificate when offered, leaving the question of its validity to be passed upon by the courts in a proper proceeding. The Court of Appeals, while holding the recorder to be a ministerial officer, yet says he is charged with some discretion in the premises, though not a judicial discretion; and that where he has exceeded the limits of that discretion and denied a right to which parties are by law entitled, his action will be controlled by the courts. The question presented, therefore, was whether the certificate presented was entitled to record, and this the court denies for several reasons. In the first place the court holds that corporations formed under subchapter 4 are, by the provisions thereof, restricted to a single object, while in the certificate offered for record five distinct classes of business are stated; and that the defect in the certificate in this regard was not helped by the provision of section 633 of the Code, allowing corporations to extend their business to "any other business authorized hereby," etc. In the next place, the certificate attempted to give the corporation power to operate railways, and this the court holds could not be done in the face of an express prohibition in the law itself. The certificate named five trustees, while but three of the number signed and acknowledged it, and this the court holds a defect—the language of the court in that connection being of especial significance. The opinion of the court is by Mr. Justice Morris, will be reported in our next issue, and should be carefully studied by those proposing to form corporations under the law of this District.

Negligence; Fellow Servants.

In the case of Looney, admx., v. Metropolitan Railroad Company et al., the appeal was from a judgment for the defendant in an action by the administratrix of the estate of a decedent to recover damages for his death caused by the negligence of the defendants. The deceased was an employee of the defendant company, and was killed by an electric shock received while at work in a "pit" where the current is changed from underground to overhead. It is held, affirming the judgment of the trial court, that if the injury was not entirely accidental, the negligence, if any, was that of a fellow servant of the decedent, and that the defendants were not liable. The opinion is by Mr. Justice Morris.

The nomination of Hon. Seth Shepard to be chief justice of the Court of Appeals of this District, in succession to Chief Justice Alvey, resigned, and of Hon. Charles H. Duell to be associate justice of that court, to fill the vacancy caused by the promotion of Mr. Justice Shephard, were confirmed by the Senate on Thursday, January 5, 1905.

RETIREMENT OF CHIEF JUSTICE ALVEY.

The chamber of the Court of Appeals of this District was the scene of a gathering held on Friday afternoon, December 30, 1904, the occasion being the final session over which Mr. Chief Justice Alvey should preside. The session was held by special request of the members of the bar, and was made memorable by the presentation to the retiring chief justice of a magnificent silver service. A distinguished company was present, including the judges of the Court of Appeals and of the Supreme Court of the District, members of the bar, and others prominent in public life.

Immediately after the court had convened, Mr. William F. Mattingly, representing the bar, made the address of presentation, and in closing read a letter from Chief Justice McSherry, of the Court of Appeals of Maryland, expressing his regret that recent illness, and the fear that leaving his home might renew it, compelled him to be absent. In the course of his letter Judge McSherry referred to Chief Justice Alvey as a man whose attainments had placed him in the foremost rank of the jurists of the English-speaking peoples.

In making the presentation Mr. Mattingly spoke as follows:

To me, Mr. Chief Justice, has been assigned the pleasant duty of voicing the feelings of the bar on your retirement from the bench. This duty is all the more pleasant because I have the consolation of feeling and knowing that nothing that I can say can transcend the limits of sincerity or to one not a stranger to you be beyond the truth. During more than a decade of service upon this bench nothing has occurred to mar the feeling of harmony between the bench and bar. During this period growing intercourse has but tended to increase the appreciation of the fact that the court had for its chief one who possessed those qualifications of mind and heart which go to the make-up of a great judge. You came as the first chief justice of this court, upon its organization in 1893, not entirely a stranger to us, because we had become somewhat familiar with your qualifications as a judge through the decisions of the Court of Appeals of our mother State, over which you had presided so long and so ably. But when you came into our midst, knowledge of the fact was brought home to us that this court had for its chief one who from long experience and long study recognized that law is a science; one who had acquired knowledge from the sources of the law; who recognized, in the language of Lord Coke, that "ratio est anima legis," and again in the language of Coke, "One in the sunshine must descend deep in the well of learning to view the bright stars of knowledge overhead;" one who had for his object the ascertainment of truth, and who brought to the attainment of that object more than usual ability, with no horror for work; one in whose hands the sword of justice became a staff upon which the innocent, and those in whom the right was, might lean for support and feel its safety.

Aside from our profound respect for the knowledge, learning, and ability of the judge, we realized that the man was kindly, humane, genial, sympathetic; not only big-brained, but big hearted; strong in the knowledge of the right, the true, the beautiful, and the good. The judge won our respect; the man our regard and esteem.

As the shadows of our lives lengthen towards the East, I feel that we become more keenly appreciative of the good wishes, kindly regard, esteem, friendship, and affection of those among whom our life is cast, than do those who are rejoicing in the vigor, confidence, and strength of self-reliant youth. It is this appreciative feeling that I have been deputed to express to you, and to assure you of its truth and depth, and I feel and know its helpfulness.

While regretting the pang of parting, we rejoice in the knowledge of the fact that you are quitting the labor of life in the full possession of those faculties of mind and heart which have rendered your life a useful one; and we trust that you may be able to spend the balance of its span in the enjoyment of books, of family, of friends, and home.

While regretting your departure from our midst, we feel that we have cause for congratulation upon the fact—and ought to make public acknowledgment of it—that the President, in the broad-mindedness of his make-up, and in his desire to give a "square deal," has disregarded what might be deemed the demands of petty politics, and has promoted to your place one of your learned associates since the organization of the court, who, we feel, will profit by the example you have set.

The bar, desiring to present you some permanent token and reminder of its respect and esteem, now offers you this service of silver—so suggestive of domesticity—the true happiness of life, of friends, of hospitality, of family, of home—in the confident hope that you may live long in the enjoyment of its use, and to you and to yours, and to those of your blood who may come after you, it may prove to be a token, a remembrance, a reminder of the respect, regard, esteem, affection, and love which the bar of the District of Columbia entertains for you. May you realize—

> "Age is opportunity no less
> Than youth itself, though in another dress.
> And as the evening twilight fades away
> The sky is filled with stars, invisible by day."

Chief Justice Alvey, responding to the address of presentation, said:

Gentlemen of the Bar: This is to me a most solemn occasion. That I retire from a life-work and from the associations of that work, that have continued for a period of nearly thirty-eight years, could not be otherwise than solemn and affecting to me. I have no words to adequately express my feelings, excited by what has been so kindly said by the representative of the bar upon this occasion.

As is well known, I have been for nearly thirty-eight years on the bench—a greater part of that time on the bench of the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and for the last eleven and a half years on the bench of the Court of Appeals of this District. And during that long period of service it has been a source of intense gratification to me that the relations between the bar and myself, as well as that with my brother judges, has been none other than that of entire kindness and courtesy.

The time has come, however, when those kindly official relations, which have so long subsisted, must terminate. Time and the infirmities of age render it necessary that I should retire to the shades of life and give place to one of more youthful vigor and energy for the discharge of the duties of the position that I have heretofore held in this court.

We have been associated together since the organization of this court, in the work of administering justice; your function being that of enlightening the court, and the function of the court that to decide the issue of the matter discussed before it. It has been the good fortune of this court during the period of its existence to have a learned and able bar, and that has been no small element in whatever success may have been attained by the court. A good and learned bar is essential to the success of any court, however high and controlling its jurisdiction.

It is a sad reflection to me that this is the last time that I am to occupy this seat and to meet you all face to face, and never more to hear you discuss your contentions at the bar. But the inexorable effects of time and the infirmities of age prescribe laws to which we must all submit, however reluctantly. And it is to that law I now submit in retiring from this bench.

The beautiful testimonial that the bar has so kindly tendered me I receive as a token of their kindness and esteem, and I shall ever regard it as a lasting memorial of the pleasant relations that have existed between us. I beg that the members of the bar will accept my very sincere thanks for this generous mark of their approbation. That I accept it with high appreciation it is unnecessary for me to declare, but as a memorial of this present occasion, with the very kind feelings expressed for myself upon its presentation, I shall always regard it as of inestimable value.

In conclusion, gentlemen, I must beg that you will, one and all, accept my most sincere thanks for your great manifestation of kindness and regard, and that you all, individually, be assured of my highest regard and esteem, and that you have my best wishes for a long and happy life. And having said this much as chief justice of this court, I must now bid you all a final adieu, for the seat that I now occupy, after this day's brief session, will never more be occupied by me as the chief justice of this court.

The silver service consists of five pieces and a mahogany inlaid tray. The coffee pot bears the following inscription: "To the Honorable Richard H. Alvey, First Chief Justice of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, upon his retirement from the bench, December 31, 1904, from the Members of the Bar."

The committee in charge of the ovation was composed of J. Holdsworth Gordon, chairman; A. S. Worthington, J. J. Darlington, William F. Mattingly, A. A. Hoehling, jr., Benjamin Minor, George E. Hamilton, M. J. Colbert, and Melville Church. The chief justice came to Washington from his home at Hagerstown, Md., at the request of the committee, to be present at the session of the court.

Opinion Evidence.

In Aldrich v. Bay State Construction Co., decided by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts in October, 1904, 72 N. E. 53, it was held that on an issue as to the value of corporate stock of which there had been no sales, the opinion of the treasurer as to what would be the fair market value was admissible. The court said in part:

"The same person who was the president of the defendant construction company held also the office of treasurer in each of the street railway companies. There had been no sales of stock of the Turners Falls Company. Under these circumstances, the court admitted his answer to the question what, in his opinion, would be the fair market value of the stock—that he should call it $100 per share. The bill of exceptions does not show that this question or answer were excepted to, although it shows an exception to evidence of value on a certain date. We think the evidence was properly admitted, in the absence of any possible evidence of ordinary market value."

Carriers—Injury to Passengers—Evidence.

In Rodman v. North Jersey St. Ry., decided by the Supreme Court of New Jersey in November, 1904 (58 Atl. 1095), it was held that where the proofs are that a trolley car was driven past a barrel wagon moving in the opposite direction; that the wagon had projecting sides; that the condition of the roadway was such that a lurch of the wagon might reasonably be anticipated, and that the space between the two vehicles at the time and place of passing was not sufficient to prevent the car from being struck, it was not error to refuse to non-suit the plaintiff, or to deny a motion to direct a verdict for the defendant company.

Vendor's Lien—Limitations.

The Supreme Court of Indiana held, in the case of Cassell v. Lowry, that when a debt for the unpaid purchase price of land has been barred by the statute of limitations, a vendor's lien in his favor for such purchase money is also barred; but that a purchaser of land who admits the existence of a vendor's lien for unpaid purchase money which has become non-enforceable by the running of the statute, can not quiet his title as against such lien, for equity will not relieve a man from his honest debts, although lapse of time may have destroyed his creditor's right to sue thereon.

Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

AUGUSTUS L. SHAFFER, APPELLANT,
v.
THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

HOMICIDE; EVIDENCE; PHOTOGRAPH OF ACCUSED; LEADING QUESTIONS; PROOF OF HANDWRITING; WITNESSES; INSANITY; EXPERT TESTIMONY; OPINIONS OF NON-EXPERTS.

1. In a prosecution for homicide, where it was shown that at the date of the homicide defendant wore no beard but only a moustache, while at the trial he wore a full beard, a photograph taken by the officer having him in custody shortly after his arrest is admissible to enable a witness to identify defendant as the person seen loitering in the vicinity of the scene of the crime.
2. The taking of the photograph while under arrest, and its use as stated, was not a violation of the principle that an accused person can not be required to give evidence against himself or to furnish evidence to be so used.
3. The allowance of a leading question will be regarded as matter of substantial error only where the appellate court can see that a witness has been led, by the form of the question, to make an answer prejudicial to the objecting party.
4. It is not required that a witness testifying to the handwriting of a party should have seen him write; but proof of handwriting may consist of ordinary circumstantial evidence showing a reasonable probability of the writing having been made by the person purporting to have made it.
5. Evidence held sufficient to show the loss or destruction of a letter alleged to have been written by a person accused of homicide so as to admit secondary evidence of its contents, and to show that it was in the handwriting of the accused, the jury being instructed to disregard it unless they should find, beyond a reasonable doubt, that it was written by him.
6. Where in the list of witnesses furnished by the prosecution to the defendant, as required by sec. 1038 R. S., the names of two persons, mother and daughter, whose names are identical and who lived at the same address, are included, but there is nothing to indicate which was the mother and which the daughter, the defendant is not justified in assuming that both refer to the same person; and both are competent to testify, especially where there is no showing that the defendant was in any manner misled or prejudiced thereby.
7. A medical witness, whose competency as an expert is unquestioned, may give his opinion as to the sanity of an accused at the time of the homicide, based upon a full personal examination of the accused made two months and eight days thereafter.
8. A charge by the trial court to the jury, in effect that no weight was to be given to opinions of lay witnesses or non-experts on the question of insanity unless based upon facts testified before them, and unless the jury entertain the same opinion on the facts proven before them, held proper, when read in connection with other parts of the charge in reference to the question of insanity.

No. 1477. Decided December 13, 1904.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, holding a Criminal Court, Criminal, No. 23,891, entered upon a verdict finding him guilty of murder in the first degree. Affirmed.

Mr. Henry E. Davis, Mr. W. J. Lambert, and Mr. D. W. Baker for the appellant.

Mr. Morgan H. Beach and Mr. Charles A. Keigwin for the United States.

Mr. Chief Justice ALVEY delivered the opinion of the Court:

The appellant in this case was indicted on the 3d day of November, 1903, for the wilful and premeditated murder of his divorced wife, Catharine Shaffer, on the 22d day of August, 1903, on one of the public streets of the city of Washington. The accused was arraigned and pleaded not guilty, and upon trial by jury he was found guilty of murder in the first degree as indicted. Many exceptions were taken by the accused in the course of trial; and upon sentence that he be hanged, he has taken this appeal.

The crime as charged in the indictment is, that the accused feloniously, purposely, and of his deliberate and premeditated malice, did, on the day named, assault the said Catharine Shaffer, and then and there with a razor inflicted in and upon the right side of the neck of her the said Catharine Shaffer, one mortal wound of the length of seven inches and of the depth of three quarters of an inch, of which said mortal wound the said Catharine then and there instantly died.

On the trial, the Government proved the homicide as charged, to have been committed on the 22d day of August, 1903. There was no question made as to the commission of the crime by the accused; that was conceded. The accused and the deceased were married in the year 1891, and were divorced upon the application of the wife on the 16th day of April, 1901. By the decree of divorce, the custody of their son William was given to the father, and the custody of their daughter to the mother, the deceased. For two or three weeks immediately prior to the homicide the accused had been seen loitering in the neighborhood of the corner of the street which was about half a square from the home of the deceased; and on several occasions during that period had accosted deceased in the street and attempted to induce her to grant interviews with him, which she refused to do. On one of these occasions, after the deceased had refused him an interview, the accused boarded a street car upon which the deceased was riding and rode for some distance thereon while she was on the car. On other occasions, he was seen frequently following her from place to place. On the Sunday night immediately preceding the homicide, he had followed her home, saying, as she entered the house, "God damn you, Kate, wait." Three days before the homicide, the accused had called at about eleven o'clock in the evening, at the house where the deceased lived, and made an unsuccessful effort to see her, after which he loitered in front of the house until about one o'clock in the morning. The homicide was committed at or near the southwest corner of Fourth street and Massachusetts avenue, between the hours of eight and nine o'clock in the evening. The accused approached the deceased, and said to her, "Kate, it is my time and my chance now." He then seized her with one hand, and cut her throat with a razor. Immediately afterwards, when asked by a bystander, who had approached, why he had done such an act, his reply was that the woman was his wife, and that she had done him dirty, and that he ought to have done this years before, adding an opprobrious epithet. To another bystander he said, "Go down to her house and tell her people." And to another person, as he was being taken to the station house, he said: "It is done now, and there is no use talking about it; you see that I am not worried." There was evidence tending to prove that prior to the homicide the accused wore no beard; that he wore no beard when a photograph was taken of him at the police station, but that, during the trial, he wore a full beard. There was also given in evidence to the jury the contents of a letter purporting to have been written by the accused to the deceased, about a month prior to the homicide. The letter was written from Beltsville, Maryland, and purported to be in answer to one written by the deceased to her son Willie, who was with his father at Beltsville. In that letter, purporting to have been written by the accused, the writer said: "I will be home about the 4th of August, and if you do not see me I will fix you in a way you do not like. I do not intend those damned Ivey girls to make a fool of me. You will see where you land. Yours, Gus. S."

The original of this letter was shown to have been lost, and there was considerable contest over the effort on the part of the government to prove the handwriting of the accused, in order to establish the genuineness of the letter. Proof, however, was admitted of the handwriting as being that of the accused, and the contents of the letter were allowed to be given in evidence.

At the conclusion of the evidence for the prosecution in chief, the accused offered evidence to support his defense. As we have said, there was no denial of the fact of the commission of the homicide by the accused. His defense was that of insanity at the time of the commission of the act. He offered and gave in evidence tending to show that he was by nature easily excitable to passion; that when under the influence of passion he was liable to become incapable of controlling himself; would lose all power to control himself; was liable to do anything, and was a practical maniac; also, that he was addicted to drink, and when under the influence of excessive drink was similarly liable to lose possession of his senses, and to act in a manner indicating want of control of his will and other faculties; that at the time of the homicide under inquiry, he was greatly intoxicated; and further, that at the time of the said homicide he was of unsound mind and insane.

By a number of witnesses, according to the statement in the bill of exceptions, the accused gave evidence tending to show that said witnesses had known and associated with the accused for various longer and shorter periods of time; in some instances beginning with his boyhood, and continuing down to the time of the trial; that, in general, his conduct was strange and unusual, and in his boyhood he was called by his companions "Looney Shaffer;" and, in his boyhood, and afterwards, was called by some who knew him, "Crazy Gus;" that some of the witnesses had worked and lived in the same house with him before and up to within a short time of the homicide, and that said witnesses observed a number of actions which they characterized as "queer," "peculiar," "eccentric," some of said actions consisting, as they thought, of crazy talk; that he would excitedly wave his arms, seemed to have a grievance for which no foundation appeared; would burst into tears, look in a blank way; would get so rattled that he did not know what he was doing; would repeat orders and give conflicting orders to those employed under him; did odd and unnecessary and inexplicable things in the conduct of his business; had a peculiar look or stare; was at times morose and sullen, and at other times exceedingly violent; talked very disconnectedly at times; had hallucinations as to people following him; and had such hallucinations the night before the homicide; he became wild when he talked about the deceased; and did other acts indicating a peculiar and weak nature; all which several matters and things were narrated to the jury; and that, from the observation and knowledge of the same, the said witnesses testified that they had formed and entertained an opinion that the accused was of unsound mind, and irresponsible for his acts. But some of the witnesses who testified for the accused, testified that they did not consider, and never had considered, the accused insane.

The prosecution, in rebuttal, offered and gave in evidence by witnesses who testified, that they had known the accused for long periods, and that they never had considered him other than of sound mind; that for six or seven years he was foreman in charge of the delivery station of the Blue Line fast freight, and had charge of the delivery of about fifteen carloads of freight per day; and had authority to employ and discharge men, and that there were from fifteen to twenty-five men under his charge. Other witnesses testified that for about two years preceding the homicide, the accused was employed in the Government Printing Office, in a position requiring a considerable degree of intelligence, and that he did his work intelligently, faithfully, and well.

While there were more exceptions contained in the record, the assignments of error are reduced to six, and they are as follows:

1. That there was error in overruling the appellant's objection to the admission of the photograph of the appellant in evidence, and in permitting the witness, Mary Hoy, to examine said photograph.

2. That there was error in overruling appellant's objection to the leading question asked the witness Agnes Ivey, as to her knowledge of appellant's handwriting.

3. That there was error in allowing, over appellant's objection, several witnesses to testify as to the contents of a letter alleged to have been written by the appellant.

4. That there was error in permitting, over appellant's objection, the witness, Miss Georgia C. Ivey, to testify in the case, because not properly named in the list of witnesses required to be furnished the accused.

5. That there was error in permitting, over appellant's objection, Dr. Jelliffe, an expert witness, to give his opinion as to the condition of mind of the appellant on August 22, 1903, based upon an examination made by him about November 1, 1903.

6. That there was error in charging the jury that no weight was to be given to the opinion of a layman on the question of insanity, unless that opinion was based upon facts testified to before the jury, and unless the jury entertain the same opinion as the layman on the facts proven before them.

We shall examine these assignments of error in the order in which they are stated, though the assignments of error are not made in the order of the exceptions taken, as stated in the bill of exceptions.

1. The first of these assignments of error relate to the admission for use in evidence of a photograph of the accused, which was taken by a police officer shortly after the homicide, and while the accused was under arrest. The facts under which the photograph was proposed to be used were these: It had been shown in proof by a witness, Miss Hoy, that she had seen a man loitering in the neighborhood of the corner where the homicide was committed for some time before the killing occurred. She was unable to identify the accused as that man. At the date of the homicide the accused wore no beard on his face but a mustache only, while at the trial he wore a full beard. The witness was shown the photograph, and she recognized it as the picture or photograph of the man she had observed near the corner. To this offer and use of the photograph the accused objected, but his objection was overruled, and the photograph was allowed to be used as proposed and the witness to testify to the identity of the accused, with the aid of the photograph. The accused excepted to this ruling.

It is conceded that the photograph used at the trial was the one taken by the officer of the accused while the latter was in custody, under arrest for the homicide. It has become the settled practice of courts to recognize photography as a proper means of producing correct likenesses both of individuals, and other objects, and therefore photographs are allowed to be produced in evidence to enable witnesses to establish the identity of persons and places,—such proof frequently becoming necessary to enable courts to establish essential facts when other proof might be difficult to obtain. Udderzook v. Com., 76 Penn. St. 340. Applying this principle, it has been held, that on an indictment for bigamy, a photographic likeness of the first husband could be shown the witnesses present at the first marriage, in order to prove his identity with the person mentioned in the marriage certificate. Regina v. Tolson, 4 F. & F. 103. And so in the case of State v. Ellwood, in the Supreme Court of Rhode Island, 24 Atl. Rep. 782, it was held that a picture of the defendant taken shortly after his arrest was admissible to show his appearance at that time, as compared with his appearance at the time of the trial, when he had in the meantime grown a moustache and otherwise changed his personal appearance. And in the case of Com. v. Morgan, in the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, 34 Northeastern Rep. 458, on a trial for larceny, a witness testified that at the time of the commission of the crime the defendant had side whiskers and a mustache, while certain witnesses for the defendant testified that they had known the defendant since the spring of 1887, and that he had never worn side whiskers. In this state of proof it was held that it was proper to admit in evidence a photograph of defendant to show that when it was taken in July, 1887, he wore side whiskers. There are many other cases that might be cited to show that photographic pictures are constantly used as means of evidence in courts of justice, and especially on questions of disputed identity.

But we understand the main point of this objection to be, that as the witness produced to identify the accused failed to identify him, it was not competent to the government to place in the hands of that witness a photographic picture taken of the accused by the police officer, after his arrest and while in the custody of the officer, for purpose of identification. In other words, that the government had no right to photograph the accused while holding him in custody for the purpose of using that photograph to have him identified at the trial. This objection is founded upon the theory that the use of the photograph so obtained is in violation of the principle that a party can not be required to testify against himself or to furnish evidence to be so used. But we think there is no foundation for this objection. In taking and using the photographic picture there was no violation of any constitutional right. There is no pretense that there was any excessive force or illegal duress employed by the officer in taking the picture. We know that it is the daily practice of the police officers and detectives of crime to use photographic pictures for the discovery and identification of criminals, and that, without such means, many criminals would escape detection or identification. It could as well be contended that a prisoner could lawfully refuse to allow himself to be seen, while in prison, by a witness brought to identify him, or that he could rightfully refuse to uncover himself, or to remove a mark, in court, to enable witnesses to identify him as the party accused as that he could rightfully refuse to allow an officer, in whose custody he remained, to set an instrument and take his likeness for purposes of proof and identification. It is one of the usual means employed in the police service of the country, and it would be matter of regret to have its use unduly restricted upon any fanciful theory of constitutional privilege.

2. The second assignment of error relates to what is alleged to have been a leading question allowed to Agnes Ivey.

The question was in the following form: "Were your opportunities of examining these orders from the defendant of such a character as to enable you to recognize his handwriting if you saw it again?" Whether this question was leading in its character depended upon the circumstances under which the examination had been conducted; and the fact that it may have been leading, did not necessarily make it objectionable. It is only where the appellate court can see that the witness has been led, by the form of the question, to make an answer prejudicial to the objecting party, that such question will be regarded as matter of substantial error. Ordinarily, the form of the question and the course of the examination of the witness are matters within the discretion of the court below, not subject to review. The conduct and intelligence of the witness, as well as the purpose to improperly lead him to make biased and colorable answers to questions, are all matters within the view and observation of the court below; and an appellate court will assume that the court below is best able to regulate and impose the proper restraint upon the examination. But, in the present instance, there is no sort of ground for the objection urged. For, in the course of the subsequent examination of the witness, the same fact is elicited and brought out in distinct form as that in answer to the alleged objectionable question; and therefore no prejudice could have resulted from the question objected to, but allowed by the court. There was no error in that ruling.

3. The subjects of the third assignment of error are the rulings of the court in relation to evidence to establish the handwriting of the accused, and the contents of the letter purporting to have been written by the latter to the deceased from Beltsville, Md., dated July 26th, (or 27th), 1903. The handwriting was proved and the contents of the letter, (the letter itself having been proved to be lost,) were admitted in evidence. The rulings under which this evidence was admitted were all excepted to by the accused.

It appears from the evidence in the record, that in the latter part of July, 1903, the accused was at Beltsville, Maryland, with his little son Willie, and a friend by the name of Myers. The son's birthday occurred on the 23d or 24th of that month, and about that date the deceased, the mother of the boy, wrote a letter to her son in regard to some small articles which she had procured as presents for him on his birthday. After the death of the mother, a letter dated from Beltsville, on the 26th or 27th of July, and purporting to come from the accused, was found among her effects. The material part of this letter has already been stated. The letter was accidentally lost or destroyed, but not until after it had been read by Mrs. Ivey, the mother of the deceased, and the two sisters of the deceased, Miss Agnes Ivey and Mrs. Elizabeth Sage.

The Government gave evidence tending to prove the finding of this letter among the papers of the deceased, and that it had been lost or destroyed, and that it was in the handwriting of the accused. It was proved that the accused was at Beltsville on the day on which the letter was written or dated; that his son Willie and Mr. Myers were with him; that Willie had received a letter from his mother in regard to his birthday presents; and that the letter purporting to be from the accused made reference to all these circumstances, and stated that he intended to return to the city on the 4th of August following, and that he did return on that day.

The contents of the letter being objected to, upon the ground that the letter had not been shown to have been in the genuine handwriting of the accused, nor its contents properly established by competent proof, the Government proceeded to show by proof, that the letter was found by Agnes Ivey, a sister of the deceased, about a week after the homicide, in a box of stationery among the effects of the deceased in the room occupied by her for several months prior to her death. The deceased had lived with her mother and sisters up to the time of her death, and there were no other occupants of the house; they kept no servant; and no one else had access to the room. Miss Ivey, immediately upon finding the letter, had taken it to her mother and her sister, Mrs. Sage, who read it, and the letter was left in the custody of the mother. The family were at the time preparing to move to another house, and shortly thereafter did remove. Some months after the homicide, occasion arose to examine the letter, but it could not be found. A very full and exhaustive search was made for it, in every place where the paper might be placed, but without success. Many papers had been destroyed, and among them some that belonged to the deceased. Mrs. Ivey, Mrs. Sage, and Miss Agnes Ivey all testified to the fact of the search, and their inability to find the letter. The other two inmates of the house testified that they had never seen the paper, and there was no other person in or about the house that could have taken the paper out of its place of deposit.

This proof was certainly sufficient to let in secondary evidence of the contents of the paper, provided the genuineness of the handwriting of the accused be established as that in which the letter was written; and this was a question about which there was severe contest on the part of the accused, the effort being to exclude the evidence offered on the part of the Government for that purpose.

The handwriting of the accused was proved by one witness who had seen him write, though in an imperfect way; by two witnesses who had seen writing known to be his, and by the fact that the letter in question bore intrinsic evidence that it was in reply to the prior letter of the deceased written to the little son then in the care of his father at Beltsville.

Mrs. Sage, a sister of the deceased, and one of the witnesses who had seen the letter after the homicide, swore that she had seen the accused write, that she had seen his writing, and that she knew his handwriting; and that the letter found among her sister's effects after her death, written in July, she read and knew it to be in the handwriting of the accused, and it was left with her mother. But she states that she could recall no particular occasion on which she had seen him write, except one time at a game of cards in which he kept the score; that she could not say that on that occasion he had written any name, but she saw the column of figures which he had written. She further testified that she had seen letters written by the accused to her sister before they were married; and that she, herself, had on one occasion received a letter from him, when she was out of town, in which she referred to a misunderstanding between them, and he made an apology for some conduct of his which had given her offense.

The witness Agnes Ivey by whom the letter to the deceased was found after the homicide, but subsequently lost or destroyed, read the letter before it was delivered to her mother, and she testifies that the letter was in the handwriting of the accused. As means of knowledge of his handwriting she testifies that she had been employed as a bookkeeper at a grocery and bakery at which the accused was in the habit of dealing. To this place he used to send written orders for goods, which orders were filled by the witness and by her charged upon his pass book. The book was always returned to the accused. The book was brought by the son of the accused, who, at that time, was too young to write, and there was no one at the house of the accused except himself who could have written the orders.

The facts as proved by the two witnesses, Mrs. Sage and Agnes Ivey, are, in our opinion, sufficient to constitute the foundation of knowledge to enable each of them to testify to the genuineness of the handwriting of the accused, and that the lost letter was in his handwriting. And as to the proof of the loss or destruction of the letter and of the contents thereof, there would seem to be no room for doubt or question. That proof was amply furnished by the testimony of Mrs. Ivey, the mother of the deceased, and the two sisters, Mrs. Sage and Miss Agnes Ivey. The letter was brief, and they all concur in testifying to substantially the identical terms of it.

It has been earnestly insisted, and many authorities cited to support the contention, that the evidence was not sufficient to let in proof of the contents of the letter. But we think, on the decided weight of authority, that the evidence was amply sufficient for that purpose. It is not required that the witness testifying to the handwriting of a party should have seen him write; knowledge of handwriting may be acquired by other means. Proof of the handwriting of a party may consist of ordinary circumstantial evidence, showing a reasonable probability of the writing having been made by the person purporting to have made it. Indeed, all evidence of handwriting, except where the witness saw the document written or signed, is, in its nature, comparison. It is the belief which a witness entertains, upon comparing the writing in question with its exemplar in his mind, derived from some previous knowledge acquired in some of the various ways mentioned in the books, that the writing in question is genuine. 1 Greenl. Ev., secs. 576, 577. Where the writing upon which the witness founds his opinion or knowledge of the party's handwriting are letters or other writings, and are of such a nature as to make it probable that they were written by the hand from which they purport to come, the witness in such case will be admitted to speak to that person's handwriting. "As said by Mr. Phillips (2 Phill. Ev. p. 600), the admissibility of the evidence must depend upon this, whether there is good reason to believe that the specimens from which the witness derives his knowledge were written by the supposed writer of the paper in question." Or, as said by the same learned author (id. p. 601), "The knowledge of handwriting may be acquired by these or any other modes of communication between the party and the witness, which, in the ordinary course of the transactions of life, would induce a reasonable presumption that the letters or documents were the handwriting of the party."

In recent times the rule upon this subject, like the rule in respect to most questions of evidence, has been considerably liberalized and extended, and made to conform to the reasonable requirements of the present methods of the ordinary transactions of life; and this is shown by what was said by the Supreme Court, in the case of Rogers v. Ritter, 12 Wall. 317, 322. In that case, in speaking of the knowledge of handwriting and the modes by which that knowledge may be acquired, the court said: "The difficulty has been in determining what is proper knowledge, and how it shall be acquired. It is settled everywhere, that if a person has seen another write his name but once he can testify, and that he is equally competent, if he has personally communicated with him by letter, although he has never seen him write at all. But is the witness incompetent unless he has obtained his knowledge in one or the other of these modes? Certainly not; for in the varied affairs of life there are many modes in which one person can become acquainted with the handwriting of another, besides having seen him write or corresponded with him. There is no good reason for excluding any of these modes of getting information, and if the court, on the preliminary examination of the witness, can see that he has that degree of knowledge of the party's handwriting which will enable him to judge of its genuineness, he should be permitted to give to the jury his opinion on the subject."

At the conclusion of the evidence, the court gave a very explicit instruction to the jury in regard to the letter in question; and instructed the jury, that before they could consider the alleged contents of the letter claimed to have been written by the accused in July, 1903, they must find from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that it was in the handwriting of the accused. With this instruction before them, to be considered in connection with all the evidence upon the subject, it is difficult to perceive how the jury could have been led into any mistake in their finding upon the subject. We think there was no error in any of the rulings of the court covered by the third assignment of errors.

4. The next assignment of error relates to the alleged incompetency of a witness, Miss Georgia C. Ivey, to testify for the Government, because not properly designated in the list of witnesses to be called for the prosecution, and which is required to be furnished the accused, under section 1033 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. The object and purpose of the provision is to furnish the accused with a list of the witnesses upon whose testimony he may be tried for the crime charged against him. In this case, the witness and her mother had names precisely identical, and both lived in the same house. In the list of witnesses the name Georgia C. Ivey appeared at two places, separated by thirty-four intervening names. Neither was distinguished by the prefix Miss or Mrs., and there was nothing to indicate which was the mother or which was the daughter. They both had the same place of address. Was the accused justified in presuming that there was but one person represented by these names so appearing in the list?

There is nothing to show that the accused was in any manner misled, or in any way prejudiced, by the manner in which the two witnesses were named in the list. The point of the objection seems to have been that the persons named should have been distinguished by some proper prefixes or additions to indicate that they were different persons. But there was no presumption that there was but one person in fact named twice in the list. The presumption was rather the other way, that there were two different persons of the same name, living in the same house. This we know is frequently the case in families,—the father and son, or mother and daughter bearing the same name. But there is nothing in the statute to require the use of prefixes or affixes to names for purpose of distinction. If the accused had really been in doubt as to the matter, and deemed it of importance to his defense, he could easily have applied to the court for direction to the prosecution officers to make the necessary correction in the list, and thus remove the difficulty—a thing that the court, in its discretion, would have readily done, if there was reason to suppose that the accused was liable to be misled to his prejudice. But no such action was taken; and the witness was simply objected to as incompetent to testify for the Government. We perceive no error in overruling the objection to this witness.

5. The fifth assignment of error relates to the ruling of the court in permitting Doctor Jelliffe, a competent expert witness on questions of insanity, to give his opinion as to the condition of mind of the accused on August 22, 1903, based upon an examination of the accused made by the witness November 1, 1903,—the examination being made after an interval of two months and eight days from the time of the commission of the crime. There is no question about the competency of the witness to speak as an expert,—that is conceded. The question is as to his competency to give an opinion as to the sanity or insanity of the accused at the time of the homicide, based upon a full personal examination of the accused made two months and eight days thereafter. A very full personal examination appears to have beeen made by the witness of the accused while the latter was confined at the jail; and, against the objection of the accused, the witness was allowed to give an opinion that the accused was sane at the time of the commisison of the crime. This opinion was formed, of course, upon the condition of the mind of the accused as shown at the time of the examination, and such indicia as existed of its previous condition. The mental defects spoken of by some of the witnesses for the accused were of a congenital nature, or natural infirmities of mind, manifesting themselves through life. But we can not perceive the reason why, if mental maladies existed of any kind, the skilled expert in the science of mental diseases, would not be able to discover the signs or traces of such disease after so short a time from the violent manifestation of such mental disorder, as is claimed to have existed in the case of the accused. Mental diseases, or the violent and unrestrained disorders of the mental powers, do not disappear in a day, or a week, or a month, except in cases of casual drunkenness. And if such mental derangement existed as to render the accused irresponsible for the brutal and shocking homicide of his former wife only two months and eight days before the examination by the witness, it is hardly conceivable that all traces and indicia of the malady by the time of the examination, had disappeared, so that the skilled witness was led into an erroneous and unfounded opinion as to the sanity of the accused at the time of the homicide. If the diseased and insane condition of mind existed, as supposed, at the time of the homicide, that condition of mind would have existed, at least to some extent and in some form, at the time of the examination of the accused by the witness, and the latter would have been unable to conclude, as he did, from the then condition of the party, that his mind was sane, and was sane at the time of the homicide; or, in other words, that the accused "was of sound mind." The witness being a skilled expert, and having stated that he could form, and had formed, an opinion as to the sanity of the accused at the time of the homicide, based upon a personal examination of the accused made two months and eight days thereafter, that opinion of the sanity or soundness of mind of the accused was admissible as evidence to the jury to be considered by them.

There is nothing singular or peculiar in such opinion or the mode of arriving at it. Similar questions have been before the courts before the present, and have been disposed of as we have disposed of the present question. In the case of Freeman v. People, 4 Denio, 8, 40, the judge, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "I entertain no doubt that such a witness (an expert witness) should be allowed to express an opinion in regard to the mental condition of a person alleged to be insane in the month of March, although the opinion may have been founded solely upon an examination made in the following July. In most cases, undoubtedly, the opinion would be more satisfactory and convincing when based on observation made at or about the time to which the inquiry relates. But this is not decisive against the reception of such evidence, though founded upon an examination made at a later period. The competency of the testimony is one question, and its effect another. The former is for the court, the latter for the jury. It will sometimes, no doubt, be found, and perhaps not unfrequently, that the mental malady is such that an examination would disclose beyond all peradventure to a skillful physician what must have been the condition of the patient for months or years before."

In the case of People v. Hoch, 150 N. Y. 291, the question was somewhat different, but it was ruled upon the same principle as in the preceding case. In Hoch's case, the district attorney showed by a skillful physician, who had charge of Auburn prison, that he, the witness, had made an examination of the defendant, for the purpose of ascertaining his mental condition, just before and during the trial. He had observed him from day to day, and he stated just what he had done in examining him. He was asked whether, in his opinion the defendant was sane or insane; to which question an objection was made, because it did not relate to the time of the homicide, but the objection was overruled. The contention on the part of the defendant was, that the inquiry should be as to his condition on the day of the homicide, and not at the time of the trial. "Of course," said the court, "the issue turns upon the previous mental condition at the time of the homicide—whether he was then laboring under such a defect of reason as to render him incapable of knowing the nature and quality of the homicidal act or was incapable of knowing that it was wrong. But there is no apparent reason, and I know of no authority, for holding that in addition to all the other facts, the jury may not be informed, by any one competent to speak, as to the mental condition of the defendant at the time of the trial. He stands before them accused of crime, with the plea of insanity to shelter him from conviction at their hands, and in their consideration of his plea for exoneration, no competent evidence bearing upon his mental condition at the time of the homicide, or since, should be excluded; and the evidence objected to certainly can not be said to be prejudicial to any substantial rights of the accused, or to contravene the demands of justice."

The witness in the present case had no hesitation in saying that he was able, from the examination had, to form an opinion of the mental condition of the accused at the time of the homicide, and that he was then of sound mind. We are clearly of opinion that this evidence of the witness was admissible, and that there was no error in the ruling of the court in respect thereto.

6. The last assignment of error relates to a passage in the charge of the judge below to the jury, upon the whole evidence, wherein the jury were told that no weight was to be given to the opinion of lay witnesses or non-experts on the question of insanity, unless that opinion was based upon facts testified to before the jury, and unless the jury entertain the same opinion as the witness on the facts proven before them.

The passage in the charge upon which this assignment of error is based is as follows: "But sometimes questions come along of a nature such that all the facts bearing upon the matter are not susceptible of being reproduced before the jury through the medium of words. So it is with the question of the mental condition of an individual; it is not possible to reproduce before you all the facts which are indicia upon this point; for example, appearance, expression of countenance, attitude, continuity or rationality of discourse, or the opposite of it, or the like; therefore in such an inquiry it is appropriate to hear opinions upon the point from those whose personal observation of the facts of the matter has been such as to qualify them to form intelligent opinions upon the very point. But the opinion of a layman, although expressed before you, is without weight unless it appear that as a foundation for the opinion he entertained a knowledge of facts proven before you, which, in your judgment, warrant and support the opinion which he has expressed. Another class of opinions which you have heard, is that of physicians," etc.

What is said in this passage of the charge of of the learned judge would seem to have been said by way of contrasting the mere naked opinions of the lay witnesses with those of the skilled physicians. The whole charge must, however, be read together, to ascertain the real meaning and import of the language of the judge; and we think there is no ground for imputing error to this particular passage when read in connection with what precedes and what succeeds it in reference to the question of insanity. The question of the competency of the witness is for the court, and the court must see, in order to determine the question of competency, that the witness has such knowledge as will enable him to express an opinion as to the sanity or insanity of the party whose mind is the subject of inquiry; for otherwise the witness would not be competent to testify, not being an expert. But when the witness is held to be competent, the question of the weight and value of his opinion, or whether it is of any value at all, is solely a question for the jury. And the question of the value of his opinion will depend upon the circumstances under which he testifies; the degree of intelligence displayed by him; his opportunities for knowledge of the party under inquiry; and his knowledge of facts and circumstances calculated to make an impression upon an observer as to the mental condition of the party whose mind is the subject of inquiry. But if, upon examination of the witness, it be found that he is without reliable knowledge of the party, his habits or peculiarities, or his mode of life, and only has a slight acquaintance with him, and such as can not, in the nature of things, enable him, the witness, to form an intelligent opinion of the mental condition of the party, then such an opinion, though it be expressed, is entitled to no weight whatever, as a means of forming a rational basis for the verdict of a jury. If, therefore, the jury be satisfied in their own minds that such a witness, that is, a non-expert witness, is thus without reliable knowledge of facts or circumstances to enable him to form an opinion as to the sanity or insanity of the party whose condition of mind is the subject of inquiry, it would seem to be clear that the opinion of such witness is without weight or value, and that there would be no error in the judge in so informing the jury; and that is all that was done in this case, in the charge that was given the jury, as we read it.

The courts have not always been uniform in stating the rule upon which the opinions of non-expert witnesses are received and allowed to be considered by the jury, on questions of alleged insanity. But, as said by the Supreme Court, in Conn. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Lathrop, 111 U. S. 619, in stating the rule upon this subject—"The jury being informed as to the witness' opportunity to know the circumstances and of the reasons upon which he rests his statements as to the ultimate general fact of sanity or insanity, are able to test the accuracy or soundness of the opinion expressed, and thus they, by using the ordinary means for the ascertainment of truth, reach the ends of substantial justice." This is simply saying that, in the light of all the circumstances and reasons that may be stated by the witness as the basis of his opinion, the jury may be able to test the accuracy or soundness of the opinion expressed; and, of course, if the jury are satisfied that the opinion expressed by the witness is without foundation in reason or fact, that opinion can have no weight in enabling the jury to reach a rational conclusion on the question of sanity vel non.

In the very recent case of Queenan v. Oklahoma, 190 U. S. 548, the question arose as to what a non-expert witness could prove as to the condition of the prisoner's mind. It was a case of homicide, and where the only defense was insanity. A lawyer, called as a witness for the defendant stated that he knew the prisoner quite well; that the prisoner was his barber and had been for some years, and that he saw him on the day before the killing. He then described the appearance and conduct of the prisoner, and said that at the time he did not notice any difference from the prisoner's usual demeanor. He was then asked if since the killing he had formed an opinion as to the prisoner's mental condition at that time. This opinion he was not allowed to state; and this refusal to allow the opinion to be given, was alleged as error. "It will be seen," says the Supreme Court, "that the witness was allowed to sum up his impressions received at the time. The court said in terms that he might state any condition that existed then or any impression that it made upon the witness' mind as to the prisoner's condition. That is all that was decided in Conn. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Lathrop, 111 U. S. 612." The ruling of the court below was affirmed.

Upon reading the entire charge of the judge to the jury, we can perceive no possible ground of complaint by the accused. Take it altogether, and the case was most favorably presented for the accused. After the passage in the charge upon which error is assigned, and in conclusion, the court said: "Gentlemen of the jury, you are the sole judges of the facts in the case, and essentially the sole judges of the credibility of the witnesses who have appeared upon the stand. And you must accord to individual witnesses and the testimony given by them that degree of effect, in reaching your verdict, which in your honest judgments you think they ought to have, taking into consideration, in so far as you can conclude upon that point, from the manner and appearance of the witnesses upon the stand, and the manner of the giving of their testimony—whether it be frankly and honestly given; his apparent intelligence, or the lack of it; what his opportunity and ability was to observe facts that transpired within his presence or what was his radius of observation at the time, his capacity to remember what he has at prior times observed, and lastly, his ability to express and communicate here to you through the medium of words, accurately that which passed within his observation at prior times; considering what, if any, interest a witness has in the outcome of the case; and whether on this account he is coloring in any way the facts related in his testimony; and again, whether or not there be manifested by any particular witness, feeling; and if so, whether or not that is coloring his testimony, one way or the other."

It would seem that all pertinent considerations were fully presented to and left open for the determination of the jury; and upon full review of the case on the errors assigned, we find nothing to require a reversal of the judgment below. An over-refinement in the application of principles is seldom promotive of justice; and where a case has been fairly tried, over-refined distinctions or forced application of technicalities should never be indulged, when that indulgence leads necessarily to the defeating of a fair trial. Nothing less than substantial error should produce that result.

We must affirm the judgment, and it is so ordered. Judgment affirmed.

Accident Insurance — Application — Misrepresentations—Materiality.

In Offiner v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen, decided by the Kansas City Court of Appeals, Missouri, in November, 1904 (83 S. W. 67), it was held that under an accident policy making statements in the application a part of the policy and the only basis thereof, and stipulating that such statements are true and strict warranties, but containing an agreement by assured that in the event of his having concealed or misrepresented any facts "found to be essential in considering the risk," the policy shall be void, a misrepresentation does not avoid the policy unless it is essential to the risk. The court said:

This action is based on an accident benefit insurance policy. The plaintiff prevailed in the trial court.

Plaintiff claimed the loss of one of his eyes by an accident. The sole defense is misrepresentation of matters connected with the condition of his eyes when insured and prior to that time, which misrepresentations, defendant contends, were warranted to be true. The certificate contained the following provisions in reference to warranties and representations:

"First, That the statements in the application of said member and his answers in the medical examination, a copy of which appears upon the back hereof, and which is hereby made a part of this agreement, are true in every particular, and shall be held to be strict warranties, and shall, with the by-laws of this association, form the only basis of this contract, and for the liability of the order under this certificate the same as if fully set forth herein.

"I further agree that in the event of my having concealed, misrepresented, or suppressed any facts as to my personal or family history, as to disease or habits, or physical condition or my own condition now or in the past, which shall be found to be essential in considering my risk, the certificate to be issued hereon shall be null and void, at the election of the society issuing the same, and in such event I agree to forfeit both such certificate and all payments I shall have made thereon."

Interpreting the entire provision, we conclude, notwithstanding the positive language in the forepart of the foregoing quotation, that a misrepresentation, to be an effectual bar to plaintiff, must be one that was "essential" or material to the risk. We must allow some material and substantial force to the words "which shall be found essential in considering my risk."

The plaintiff's case showed that he was a carpenter, and while engaged in his work some foreign substance struck him in the eye, in consequence of which it became necessary to take out his eye. The question of whether the representation made by plaintiff to defendant when he took out his insurance was essential to the risk was properly and clearly submitted to the jury, and we will not disturb the finding. In Moulor v. Ins. Co., 111 U. S. 335, 4 Sup. Ct. 466, 28 L. Ed. 447, it was held that when a policy of insurance contains contradictory provisions, or has been so framed as to leave room for construction, rendering it doubtful whether the parties intended the exact truth of the applicant's statements to be a condition precedent to any binding contract, the court should avoid a construction which would put upon the assured the obligation of a warranty.

Sunday Law—Public Policy.—The Supreme Court of North Carolina, in the case of Rodman v. Robinson, denied the right to declare a contract made on Sunday void because opposed to public policy.

Limitations—Part Payment.—In Rogers v. Newton, decided by the Supreme Court of New Jersey in November, 1904, 58 Atl. 1100, it was held that a payment upon a book account, which has never been recognized in its entirety, without proof showing that such payment was made in recognition of the whole claim and as a payment upon account thereof, will not take the unpaid part of the account out of the Statute of Limitations.

Sale—Warranty—Acceptance—Notice.—The Kentucky Court of Appeals held, in the recent case of Yeiser et al. v. Russell et al., that where a vendee accepts goods delivered under a warranty of quality or retains them after discovering they are not the goods purchased, and fails to give notice within a reasonable time that he declines to receive them because not in conformity to the contract, he can not thereafter refuse to pay for them.

COURT OF APPEALS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA:
Joseph J. Darlington et al., executors, etc., appellants, v. Erle H. Turner et al. 114
Legal Notices 122

License Tax—Contractors.

The decision of the Court of Appeals in the case of District of Columbia v. Chapman, announced during the present week, settles an important question as to the construction of a provision of the personal tax law of this District. The appellee is a wholesale and retail dealer in wood and coal, and as such for some years has furnished quantities of wood and coal under contracts with the United States and the District of Columbia. In June, 1903, a demand was made upon him for payment of a license tax as a contractor, and on his refusal he was charged in the Police Court with doing business without a license. To avoid the publicity and notoriety of a trial in the Police Court, he paid the tax under protest; and on his demand for a return of the money being refused brought suit to recover the amount. The case was heard in the Supreme Court of the District, without a jury, and Mr. Justice Barnard held that Chapman was not liable to the tax, and sustained his right to recover the money. His ruling is affirmed by the Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Shepard, in which it is held that the license tax imposed by the statute upon "building and other contractors" could not be enforced against the appellee, as a wholesale dealer in wood and coal, merely because he had contracts to furnish the same in large quantities to the general and municipal governments. The term "other contractors," used in the act, is characterized as "too vague and uncertain."

Homicide—Presumption of Sanity.

In State v. Austin, decided by the Supreme Court of Ohio in January, 1905, and reported in 71 Ohio State Reports, the court states the rule to be that, in a homicide case, the presumption of sanity serves the State as the full equivalent of express proof until such time as it shall appear by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant was insane at the time of the commission of the crime. In that case it appeared that the defendant, prior to the homicide, had twice been adjudged insane and committed to an asylum, but was discharged therefrom the last time nearly two years before the commission of the crime. Counsel for defendant requested the trial court to instruct the jury that "proof of prior insanity throws upon the State the burden of proving the crime perpetrated during a lucid interval; it defeats the legal presumption of sanity and creates a legal presumption of continued lunacy." In holding that such instruction was properly refused, the Supreme Court said:

The particular vice of this instruction is that it states the rule too broadly. It is doubtless true that insanity is often chronic and permanent; for instance, from senile dementia and congenital idiocy there can be as a rule no recovery, and where insanity in such form is once proven to exist its continuance may be inferred or presumed, such inference or presumption, however, being one of fact and not of law. There are, perhaps, but few other forms of insanity of which recovery may not be predicated, at least as a contingency, and as to these no presumption whatever is indulged or recognized that they are continuing in their nature. Underhill Cr. Ev., sec. 156.

Therefore, the burden being upon the defendant to show that he was insane at the time of the commission of the particular act charged, proof of mere temporary or recurrent insanity, such as is shown in this case, at a time prior thereto is clearly not sufficient to rebut or overcome the legal presumption of his sanity and to impose upon the State the burden of proving that at the time the act was committed the defendant was then sane. The burden of proof does not shift, but all along it rests with the defendant, and if in any case he would overcome the legal presumption of his sanity and would exonerate himself from liability he must show by a preponderance of the evidence that at the time of the commission of the alleged criminal act he was then so far mentally deranged or unsound as not to be answerable or accountable for his act. While proof of prior insanity is competent, whether a mental condition shown to exist has continued down to the time of the commission of the alleged criminal act, is solely a question of fact to be determined by the jury. And the defendant in a criminal case who sets up insanity as a defense does not relieve himself from showing his insanity at the very time of the commission of the criminal act by proof merely that he was insane at an earlier time.

Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Morris, reported in 31 Wash. Law Rep. 322; and the Supreme Court holds that the case was rightly decided.

THE Supreme Court of the United States, in an opinion by Mr. Justice McKenna, has reversed the decree of the Court of Appeals of this District in the case of McCaffrey v. Manogue, reported in 31 Wash. Law Rep. 454. The suit involved the construction of the will of Hugh McCaffrey, deceased. The trial court and the Court of Appeals each held that the provisions in question gave to the several devisees life estates only in the properties devised to them. The Supreme Court, however, holds that the devisees carried the fee in the properties to the several devisees, and directs the entry of a decree in accordance with that holding.

LUSANAH A. CRANDELL, APPELLANT,
v.
CONSTANZE CLASSEN.

MARRIED WOMEN; PURCHASE OF STOCK; INSTRUCTIONS.

Plaintiff purchased thirty shares of stock from defendant, a portion of it being issued in her name and the residue in the name of her daughter; and defendant agreed if the purchase proved unsatisfactory to redeem the stock at the price paid. Upon her refusal to redeem, plaintiff sued for the purchase price. Defendant prayed the court to instruct the jury that no recovery could be had for the stock issued in the name of the daughter, apparently upon the contention that plaintiff was a married woman at the time of the purchase, and that in order for property purchased with her own money to be her separate estate the investment must be in her own name. Held that without reference to the question of the correctness of defendant's contention, the prayer was properly refused for the reason that the evidence failed to show that plaintiff was a married woman at the time of the purchase of the stock.

No. 1432. Decided February 7, 1905.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at Law, No. 46,146, entered upon a verdict for plaintiff, in an action to recover the amount paid for certain shares of stock. Affirmed.

Mr. Victor H. Wallace for the appellant.

Mr. Tracy L. Jeffords for the appellee.

Mr. Justice DUELL delivered the opinion of the Court:

This appeal is from a judgment entered upon the verdict of a jury in favor of the appellee, the plaintiff below, for $400, the full amount claimed, less $30 received by the appellee from one Browne from funds placed in his hands by the appellant, with interest from January 1, 1902.

The material facts of the case are, that in June, 1901, the appellee purchased of appellant thirty shares of the stock of the corporation and paid her own money for the same. Eight shares were issued in her name and twenty-two shares in the name of Wanda Meta Steffens, her daughter. The certificates of stock representing the purchase were received by the appellee and remained in her possession until she returned them to the appellant on December 28, 1901. The purchase is alleged to have been made upon an agreement that the appellant would redeem the stock at the price paid for it by appellee should the purchase at any time prove unsatisfactory to her. The appellant failed to repay the amount paid by appellee for the stock and this suit thereafter was brought. The appellant denied making any such agreement as was claimed by the appellee, and testified that the stock was brought to her for the purpose of having it redeemed by one Browne. The testimony upon this point is conflicting; but, the case having been submitted to the jury and the jury having found for the appellee, we can only consider the questions of law presented by the assignment of error.

1. The first alleged error is based upon the refusal of the court to instruct the jury that if it should find from the evidence in the case that the appellant promised the appellee as a condition of the purchase of the stock that the appellant would redeem the same at any time should it prove unsatisfactory to her, and that if the appellee, relying upon this promise, did thereafter purchase the stock, nevertheless the appellee was not entitled to recover the amount paid for the stock issued in the name of her daughter, Wanda Meta Steffens.

This request does not state the reasons why a recovery for the stock so issued could not be had, but we infer that it is based upon the contention that appellant was a married woman at the time of the purchase of the stock, and that therefore, under the Married Woman's Act of June 1, 1896, in order to hold as a part of her separate estate any property purchased with her own money, it must be invested in her own name.

As we view it, it is unnecessary to pass upon the correctness of appellant's contention, for the reason that there is nothing in the record which shows that the plaintiff was a married woman at the time when she purchased the stock. It is true that the appellee testified that she was married, but it does not follow from that that she was a married woman at the time when she purchased the stock. We are not permitted to infer anything. If the appellant desired to raise the point, the fact upon which it is based should have been proved and not left to inference.

The bill of exceptions does not set forth any evidence upon which the appellant was entitled to ask the court to instruct the jury as set forth, and, therefore, the court, in denying the prayer and in refusing to so instruct the jury, was not in error, and the exception was not well taken.

2. The second alleged error is based upon the admission in evidence of a certain letter, under date of June 1, 1901, written by appellant to the appellee.

The letter reads as follows:

"610 H street N. W., Washington, D. C.

"MY DEAR MRS. CLASSEN: For your $320 which I sent up to Mr. Browne I received the inclosed stock. If at any time it is not satisfactory, bring or send it to me and I will redeem it at the price you paid. Yesterday I received a note from 'headquarters' putting the price at $17.50. Today some has come in and you have the benefit. Let me hear from you and your daughter, to whom give my morning greetings. Send the address for forwarding your interest, due the first week in July next. With good wishes for your future and 'good luck' with your Kretol stock,

"Your friend, L. A. CRANDELL.

"I inclose the note I mentioned to you as putting the price $17.50. The portion I cut off was strictly private. You will know if it is correct."

Counsel for appellant insists that if the first assignment of error is well taken, the letter was inadmissible, as it related to the stock issued in the name of Wanda Meta Steffens, the purchase price of which stock could not be recovered in the present suit; and that it was inadmissible as to Mrs. Classen's stock because by its term the letter refers only to the stock issued in the name of Wanda Meta Steffens.

As we have overruled the first error assigned, appellant's contention that the letter is inadmissible can not be sustained, for the letter relates to the certificate for the twenty-two shares of stock which was purchased at the price of $15 per share, and it was clearly admissible to prove the promise of redemption, at least as to the twenty-two shares. Furthermore, it was admissible to show the price of that stock and the date of its delivery.

Neither of the assignments of error is well taken, and consequently there was no error in the court below.

It follows that the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed with costs, and it is so ordered.

PHILO J. LOCKWOOD, PLAINTIFF IN ERROR,

v.

THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

PERSONAL TAX LAW; CLAIM AGENTS; CONVICTION REVERSED.

1. Statutes imposing restrictions upon business or the common occupations of the people, or levying a tax upon them, are to be construed strictly.
2. The term "claim agents," as used in paragraph 46 of section 7 of the personal tax law of this District, approved July 1, 1902, imposing an annual tax of $25 upon persons engaging in business as such, is too uncertain and vague to be enforced.
3. A conviction of the plaintiff in error, an attorney at law engaged in the prosecution of claims before the Pension Bureau, under an information charging him with engaging in the business of a claim agent without license, reversed.

No. 1480. Decided February 7, 1905.

IN ERROR to the Police Court of the District of Columbia. Reversed.

Mr. W. J. Lambert and Mr. D. W. Baker for the appellant.

Mr. A. B. Duvall and Mr. F. H. Stephens for the appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice SHEPARD delivered the opinion of the Court:

Philo J. Lockwood was convicted in the Police Court under an information charging him with engaging in the business of a claim agent without license, and has been allowed a writ of error.

It appears from the evidence that plaintiff in error is an attorney at law whose business has been for several years the prosecution of claims in the United States Pension Office, and that he has not paid the annual license fee of $25 demanded of him under the personal tax law for the District, approved July 1, 1902. The demand is based on paragraph 46 of section 7 of said act, and so much of the same as is pertinent reads as follows: "An annual license tax is hereby imposed upon the following classes of business, trades, and professions, namely: . . .; claim agents, twenty-five dollars;" . . . Paragraph 47 of the same act provides that any one violating any of the provisions of section 7 shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 for each offense, and in default of payment by imprisonment not exceeding thirty days. The act contains no definition of the term claim agents, and the contention is that it is too uncertain and vague to be enforced.

In this we concur. We find no definition of the compound word claim-agent in any of the popular dictionaries, and the word as used by different persons might, in the unlimited discretion of the taxing officers, be given a very wide range of inclusion. Attorneys at law are not taxed as such, and yet one of these may be largely and even exclusively engaged in the prosecution of claims and demands before the courts, or in their adjustment generally. It would seem, as said by counsel for the plaintiff in error, that the various steam and street railway corporations operating in the District of Columbia have what are called claim agents who are engaged in the examination of claims against them as well as in their adjustment and settlement. One engaged in collecting rents for owners of property might also be deemed a claim agent in some sense of the term. And the same may be said of all persons acting for principals who may have claims for allowance, adjustment, or collection, whether in the executive departments of the Government or otherwise.

The established rule of the courts is that all statutes imposing restrictions upon business or the common occupations of the people, or levying a tax upon them are to be construed strictly.

As was said by Chief Justice Alvey in delivering the opinion of this court in Transportation Co. v. District of Columbia, 19 App. D. C. 462, 470: "All the authorities agree in maintaining that all charges upon the citizen must be imposed by clear and unambiguous language, because, as it is said, they operate as penalties. In a case of doubt that construction most beneficial to the citizen must be adopted." Here, as we have seen, the penalty for pursuing this occupation without the payment of a considerable license tax is a severe one, and it is eminently just, therefore, that the citizen should be reasonably well informed, by the language of the statute itself, of his obligation to pay money demanded of him, the failure to pay which, if he errs in its construction, may subject him to that penalty.

On behalf of the defendant in error, it is contended that the tax upon claim agents is intended to embrace those only whose business it is to prosecute claims before the executive departments of the Federal Government or the District of Columbia. In support of this construction of the meaning of the statute they have referred us to certain taxing acts of Congress and one of the former legislative assembly of the District, all of which were long ago repealed, either expressly or by implication. The two acts of Congress referred to impose a tax upon "claim agents for procuring patents" of $10, and that of the assembly taxes "claim agents" $15 per annum.

In the first two it is declared that: "Every person whose business it is to prosecute claims in any of the executive departments of the Federal Government, or to procure patents, shall be deemed a claim or patent agent, as the case may be." 12 Stat. 459; 13 Id. 254. In the act of assembly the definition is as follows: "Every person whose business it is to prosecute claims before the executive departments of the General Government or the District of Columbia shall be regarded as a claim agent."

In the first place, we fail to see how we can look to old and repealed statutes for the definition of an occupation named in the existing statute which omits altogether to define it. In the second place, if we were to do so, we should be compelled, under those first mentioned, to say that all patent solicitors, who are not now regarded as claim agents in any sense, are, nevertheless, taxable as such. If we look to the act of assembly we find that it differs from the acts of Congress in two material respects, in that it omits patent solicitors and adds to the definition of claim agents such persons as may prosecute claims before the executive departments of the District of Columbia also.

Reference to the several acts mentioned would tend to increase the uncertainty that now exists rather than to correct it. The defect of the present act is chargeable to the failure of its framers to follow the example set in the former legislature by giving a definite meaning, for the purposes of the statute, to general words used which have no fixed or reasonably certain popular signification.

The court erred in not rendering a judgment of acquittal, and the judgment must, therefore, be reversed with costs, and the cause remanded with directions to discharge the defendant. It is so ordered. Reversed.

ELIZABETH M. WILLIAMS, APPELLANT, v. BETTIE G. WILLIAMS.

ADMINISTRATION; APPOINTMENT OF WIDOW AND CHILD AS JOINT ADMINISTRATORS.

1. Under section 276, Code D. C., the Probate Court has discretion, as between a widow and a child, both qualified to act, to appoint either the one or the other as administrator of the estate of a decedent; and it is also competent for the court to appoint the widow and child as joint administrators, where they consent to such appointment; but a joint administration will not be forced upon a party entitled against his or her consent.
2. An order appointing a child as administrator of the estate of a decedent jointly with his widow and against her will reversed.

No. 1,500. Decided February 7, 1905.

APPEAL from an order of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, holding the Probate Court, Probate No. 12,166, appointing a person as coadministratrix of the estate of a decedent jointly with his widow. Reversed.

Mr. J. Altheus Johnson and Mr. Burton T. Doyle for the appellant.

Mr. W. J. Lambert and Mr. D. W. Baker for the appellee.

Mr. Justice MORRIS delivered the opinion of the Court:

This cause is here for the second time. It was formerly before us (32 Wash. Law Rep. p. 710) upon an appeal by this same appellant from an order of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, whereby another person was forced upon her against her will as coadministratrix of her deceased husband. That order was reversed, and the cause was remanded to the court below for further proceedings in accordance with the opinion then rendered by this court. In that opinion, which was pronounced by Mr. Chief Justice Alvey, it was held that a maternal grandmother of two minor children of the deceased could not be forced, upon the petition of the children by their next friend, as coadministratrix upon the widow of the deceased, who was his second wife and the step-mother of the children, notwithstanding that the relations between the children and their step-mother did not appear to be friendly, and it was suggested that their interest in the estate, which consisted merely or mainly of a chose in action, might require protection against possible injurious action by their step mother as sole administratrix. At the conclusion of the opinion, however, this clause appeared:

"It has been suggested in argument that the eldest child of the deceased has recently come of age; and if that be so, and the child be otherwise qualified, the court may, in the exercise of its discretion, under section 276 of the Code, appoint that child as coadministrator with the widow. We must, however, reverse the order appealed from and remand the cause, that action may be had in the court below in accordance with the foregoing opinion."

When, in pursuance of our decision, the mandate of this court went down, the court below, acting upon what was assumed to be the suggestion of this court in this last clause of the opinion, appointed Bettie G. Williams, the appellee, the oldest child referred to of the deceased, as coadministratrix of the estate of the deceased with the widow, over the objection of the latter, and the latter has again appealed to this court from the order of appointment.

We are constrained to hold that the court below has misconstrued the paragraph in the former opinion of this court which has been relied on in support of the action on account of which the present appeal has been taken. We did not mean in that paragraph to hold that the court below might appoint the widow and the oldest child of the deceased, the latter being of age, to act as joint-administrator of the estate of the deceased against the will of either of them. The paragraph was merely the suggestion of counsel, upon which this court declined to act, inasmuch as the case was not before it for action.

Section 276 of the Code, which is, with some slight variation, the same as section 16 of subchapter 5 of chapter 101 of the Maryland Testamentary Act of 1798, provides that "if the intestate leave a widow and a child or children, administration, subject to the discretion of the court, shall be granted either to the widow or child or one or more of the children qualified to act as administrator." As between a widow and a child, both qualified to act, this section undoubtedly leaves it to the discretion of the probate court whether it will appoint the one or the other as administrator of the estate. But it must appoint either one or the other, before it can reach out to any other class, inasmuch as the law specifically provides that the classes are to be preferred in the order in which they are enumerated, unless, of course, there is good cause for setting them aside. Undoubtedly, also, under this section 276, although the provision is in the disjunctive that administration may be granted, in the discretion of the court, either to the widow or to a child, or to two or more children qualified to act, a widow and child, or a widow and two or more children, may be appointed as joint administrators, and it is competent for the probate court to make such appointment, for, as between the widow and child, both competent to act, the law does not seem to recognize any preference or priority.

But, in so far as this court entertained this suggestion at the last hearing of the case, it did not mean to intimate that joint administration could be forced upon unwilling parties. It meant to say that the widow and the child, or the widow and two or more children, if they agreed, could be selected by the court to take joint administration of the estate. It did not mean to say that they could be compelled to act together, if either one was unwilling. Joint administration with joint liability, where the parties, from the very beginning, proclaim themselves as hostile, or at least as adverse to each other, would be an anomaly in the law and likely to lead to worse consequences than would the commission of administration to one of the hostile parties alone. What the Supreme Court of the State of Pennsylvania said in the case of Brubaker's appeal, 98 Pa. St. 21, is very pertinent here. It said:

"The prevailing rule is not to enforce a joint administration upon unwilling parties. It is very evident that the court (the Orphans' Court) recognized the impropriety of attempting to create a joint administration against the protest of one of the parties thereto. The nature of the office forbids it. Joint administration necessarily involves joint liability, and no one can be compelled to assume such responsibility. Due regard to individual rights, as well as to the interests of the estate, require that administration should not be committed to two or more persons, unless they mutually agree to accept the trust."

And it was said in a New York case, Peters v. Public Administrator, 1 Bradf. 200, after a full consideration of all the English cases that had any bearing on the subject, that "such a thing was never heard of as the court forcing upon a party entitled a joint administration against his consent."

The hostility, or antagonism, or whatever it may be, between the widow and the children in this case, is greatly to be regretted; but it does not appear to us that it will improve things to place them in a position wherein they should consult freely with each other, if they would perform their duty, and yet wherein, on account of their antagonism, they would find it impossible, perhaps, to consult with each other.

We are constrained to hold that it was error in the court below to appoint the appellee, Bettie G. Williams, as joint administratrix with the widow of the deceased, Elizabeth M. Williams. The order for such appointment must, therefore, be reversed, with costs; and the cause will be remanded to the Supreme Court of the District, with directions to vacate such order, and for such further and other proceedings therein as may be proper according to law.

And it is so ordered. Reversed.

WILLS—ATTESTATION—TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

1. The wholly unofficial certificate of a vice-consul, appearing at the foot of a will executed abroad, if otherwise sufficient as an attestation, may be treated as such by disregarding the superfluous words, "Vice-Consul, United States of America," appended to his signature.
2. An application for the admission of a testator to an insane asylum, and the certificate of two physicians, upon which the commitment was made, are inadmissible in evidence on the issue of his testamentary capacity, not only because they were unsworn testimony, but because they were given in a different proceeding and upon a different issue.

The issue of the testamentary capacity of a person who had once been in sane was properly submitted to the jury by instructions that, if they found his insanity to be permanent in its nature and character, the presumption was that it would continue, and that the burden was upon the defendant to satisfy the jury, by a preponderance of testimony, that he was, at the time of executing the will, of sound mind.—Advance Sheets, U. IN ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Supreme Court of that District, entered upon a verdict for defendants in an action of ejectment. Affirmed.

See same case below. 31 Wash. Law Rep. 339.

Statement by Mr. Justice BROWN:

This was an action of ejectment brought in the Supreme Court of the District by grantees of the heirs at law of William Thomson against Joseph H. Moore and the firm of Thomas J. Fisher & Company, agents of Mary Cecilia and Georgiana Hawkes Thomson, of the county of Kent, England, devisees under the will of William Thomson, to recover possession of an undivided ninety-one one-hundredths of certain real estate in the city of Washington. Upon the trial it was admitted that William Thomson died in Southampton, England, in 1887, seised of the lot in question; that he was born in, and was a citizen of the United States, leaving no issue or descendants. Plaintiffs had acquired the title of the heirs at law, and the defendants were in possession of the lot as life tenants under his alleged will.

The validity of the will and the due execution thereof were contested by the plaintiffs for reasons hereinafter indicated in the opinion. The trial resulted in a verdict for the defendants, upon which judgment was entered, and affirmed by the court of appeals. 31 Wash. Law Rep. 339.

Mr. C. C. Cole, Mr. Hugh T. Taggart, and Mr. Leo Simmons for plaintiff in error.

Mr. D. W. Baker and Mr. Wilton J. Lambert for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice BROWN delivered the opinion of the Court:

The validity of the will was attacked upon three grounds: 1st, that it has not the requisite number of witnesses to pass real estate in this District; 2d, that the testator was of unsound mind; 3d, that undue influence had been exercised by one of the designated executors, and others.

Thomson was a resident of Washington but, at the time of and for some years prior to his death, was the American consul at Southampton, England. One John H. Cooksey, a resident merchant at Southampton, was his vice-consul. The will was prepared by Walter R. Lomer, a resident solicitor, and was executed at his office February 24, 1866. By this will he devised the property in controversy to the appellees Mary Cecelia Thomson and Georgiana Hawkes Thomson, his cousins, of Kent County, England, jointly for their joint lives, and to the survivor of them, with remainder to Mary Cunningham Roberts, of London, for life, and remainder in fee to her only son. The will, which was executed in duplicate, was written upon two sheets of paper, to each of which the testator affixed his name. It was witnessed in the usual form by Lomer and by one Linthorne, a clerk in his office, who attached their signatures in the presence of and at the request of the testator, and in the presence of each other. On the day after the execution of the will Thomson again went to the office of his solicitor, Lomer, who wrote a certificate of acknowledgment in the margin of the second and last page of the will, which was signed by Cooksey, the vice-consul.

The original will, being of record in the Probate and Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice in London, could not be produced, but was proved by a certificate and examined copy. The attestation clause and the certificate were as follows:

Signed and acknowledged by the said William Thomson, the testator, as and for his last will and testament in the presence of us, both being present at the same time, who at his request in his presence, and in the presence of each other, have hereunto subscribed our names as witnesses.

WALTER R. LOMER,
Solicitor, Southampton, Eng.
R. ROUPE LINTHORNE,
His Articled Clerk.

I hereby certify that William Thomson, consul at Southampton for the United States of America, attended before me this 25th day of February, 1886, and acknowledged the foregoing paper-writing contained in two sheets of paper as his last will and testament and that the signature "Wm. Thomson" at the foot thereof is in the proper handwriting of the said William Thomson.

[Seal U. S. Consul.] JOHN H. COOKSEY,
Vice-Consul United States of America.

The execution of the will was proved by the two subscribing witnesses, Lomer and Linthorne, and the certificate by proof of the death of Cooksey, and the genuineness of his signature. This was proper. Clarke v. Courtney, 5 Pet. 319, 8 L. ed. 140; Stebbins v. Duncan, 108 U. S. 32, 27 L. ed. 641, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 313. At this time there was in force in this District the 5th section of the act of 29 Charles II., chapter 3, which had been adopted in Maryland in 1798, and carried into this District as section 4, chapter 70, of the Compiled Statutes of 1894. It provided as follows: "All devises and bequests of any lands or tenements, devisable by law, shall be in writing, and signed by the party so devising the same, or by some other person in his presence, and by his express directions, and shall be attested and subscribed in the presence of the said devisor by three or four credible witnesses, or else they shall be utterly void and of none effect."

The object of the certificate in question that Thomson took the will away with him is not entirely clear, though from the fact after its execution, and stated that he would attend before the consul general at London and obtain the requisite certificate, it would seem that he thought the certificate was necessary to the proof of the will in another country. He did not go to London, however, but called again at Mr. Lomer's office, with the request that he prepare the requisite certificate, which he afterwards procured Mr. Cooksey to sign. The certificate was not offered as proof that the will was a copy of the original, since it was annexed to the original, and we can consider it only as proof as to what it contains. It certifies, in substance, that the testator attended before Cooksey upon the day following the date of the will, acknowledged it to be his last will and testament, and that the signature is genuine. Whether he intended to certify that Thomson acknowledged his signature to be genuine, or that he, Cooksey, certified that it was genuine, is somewhat uncertain; but if the words "Vice-Consul of the United States of America," which are merely superfluous, were omitted, there would be no failure to comply with the statute, unless in the omission to certify that Cooksey, the certifying officer, "attested and subscribed in the presence of the said devisor." But as it appears that Thomson, not knowing when he would be in London, took the certificate to the vice-consul, and that the latter signed it, the jury might properly draw the conclusion that it was signed in the testator's presence. This would be the usual course of business, and the presumption is that Cooksey conformed to it and to his duty as a certifying officer.

The certificate was probably prepared under the belief that wills, like deeds, made in a foreign country, must be executed and acknowledged before some foreign official, or "before any (some) secretary of legation or consular officer of the United States" (Rev. Stat., sec. 1750; U. S. Comp. Stat., 1901, p. 1196; D.C. Comp. Stat., c. 58, sec. 6); but as such certificate was unofficial, and contributes nothing, as such, to the validity of the will, it can only be looked upon as the affirmation of an ordinary witness to the facts therein stated. No particular form of attestation was necessary, as appears to be the case in England and in several of the United States; and if the certificate of Cooksey had been written at the foot of the will and signed by himself and by the two witnesses, Lomer and Linthorne, it would have been a sufficient attestation. How, then, can it be regarded as insufficient when an attestation in one form is signed by two witnesses and an attestation in another form by a third? Bearing in mind that the certificate, if given any force at all, must be considered an attestation, we do not think that the fact that it may have been written and signed under a mistaken impression as to its necessity and purpose vitiates it as an attestation. What use was intended to be made of it is immaterial, if it were useless for any purpose as an official certificate. The facts certified are appropriate to the attestation of the instrument, and, if true, we see no reason for holding it to be invalid as an attestation because it was signed under the impression that it was necessary for some possible purpose as a certificate.

The case of Adams v. Norris, 23 How. 353, 16 L. ed. 539, is much in point. This was an action of ejectment for a parcel of land in California. Plaintiffs claimed through the heirs at law of one Grimes, defendants through the devisees in his will. The law required three witnesses to the validity of the will. Two of the witnesses signed in the usual manner, but above their signatures and beneath that of the testator was written: "Before me, in the absence of the two alcaldes, Roberto T. Ridley, Sindico." The sindico was counted among the witnesses, the court saying: "We comprise among the witnesses to the will, Ridley, the sindico. It does not appear that a sindico was charged with any function in the preparation or execution of testaments by the law or custom of California. Nor is it clear that the sindico in the present instance expected to give any sanction to the instrument by his official character. He attests the execution of the will, and we can not perceive why the description of himself, which he affixes to his signature, should detract from the efficacy of that attestation." As it did not appear that the sindico or the two alcaldes were charged with any special duties, it was practically held that the certificate of acknowledgment, and the official character of the sindico, might be disregarded, and the signature treated as an attestation.

In the case of Clarke v. Turton, 11 Ves. Jr. 240, the will was executed abroad. It appears that three witnesses were required, apparently under the same act of Charles II. as in this case. The third signature was, as in this case, that of the vice-consul, whose attestation was considered necessary to the validity of the act. The case is insufficiently reported, but the court held that the attestation was a memorandum of the vice-consul, to operate as a certificate, "a separate act in his public character, and sealed with his official seal; and therefore it could not be said he subscribed as a witness." The question upon that point was sent to law, but it does not appear what disposition was made of it. It appears that the certificate was an official act, and treated as necessary, but the report fails to show what it contained, and, in the absence of such showing, the case is of little value.

The applicability, and, to some extent, the authority, of this case, is somewhat weakened by that of Griffiths v. Griffiths, L. R. 2 Prob. & Div. 300. The will was signed by the testator in the presence of two witnesses, who signed their names in his presence—one opposite the word "Executors" and the other opposite the word "Witness." There was no attestation clause to the will. The deceased intended one of the witnesses to be his executor, and asked him to sign his name in that character. Lord

Penzance held that such person did not sign the will exclusively as executor, but that he also intended by his signature to affirm that the deceased executed the will in his presence, and that consequently the will was valid. Somewhat to the same effect is Pollock v. Glassell, 2 Gratt. 439.

Conceding the general rule to be that witnesses must intend to attest the will as witnesses, the inference is strong that Cooksey did so in this case, as he certifies to the genuineness of the signature of Thomson, and to the acknowledgment of the will in his presence; and these are what would have been required by the law of this District had the instrument been a deed. It is argued that Cooksey did not intend to attest the will, but merely to sign the certificate; but the certificate of what? Only the fact that the will was acknowledged in his presence, and that the signature was genuine. This is precisely the object of an attestation, and as an attestation we think it must be regarded. He may have supposed his official certificate of acknowledgment necessary to the execution of a will in a foreign country, but as he did certify personally to such acknowledgment the addition of his official title adds nothing to, and takes nothing from, the weight of his attestation. We must conclude that he intended to certify exactly what he did certify, and we are giving it exactly the effect he intended to give it.

If the certificate were an official act and material as a separate acknowledgment of the execution of the will, as in the acknowledgment of a deed, the case would be different, since it has never been supposed that a notary, who takes an acknowledgment of a deed, could be counted as a witness to the deed without a separate signature. But here the certificate was a wholly unofficial act, and we see no objection to disregarding the words "vice-consul of the United States," and treating it as an acknowledgment of the execution before a competent witness. The acknowledgment of a will is really a feature of the attestation. The statute did not require that the devisor should sign the will in the presence of the witness, but that the witness should sign in the presence of the testator.

2. The evidence of Thomson's insanity was quite unsatisfactory. It appears that during the autumn or early winter of 1885 he was seized with an acute mania, and on December 15 was committed to a private insane asylum as a lunatic, upon the certificate of two physicians, and at the request of a cousin named James E. Cunningham, a merchant of London, who appears to have taken temporary management of his affairs. He remained in the asylum about six weeks, and on February 1, 1886, somewhat more than three weeks before he executed his will, was discharged as probably cured—in reality granted a leave of absence on probation. The belief in his cure being justified by his subsequent conduct, a formal order of discharge was entered on the record of the asylum on June 26, 1886. Lomer and Linthorne, the witnesses who were present at the execution of the will, and Septimus Cooksey, the son of the vice-consul, all testified to the mental capacity of the testator at that time.

In this connection exception was taken to the exclusion of the application of James E. Cunningham for the admission of Thomson to the insane asylum, and of the certificate of the two physicians as to his insanity. These were properly excluded, not only because they were unsworn testimony, but because they were given in a different proceeding and upon a different issue. Thomson may have been insane to the extent of being dangerous if set at liberty, and yet may have had sufficient mental capacity to make a will, to enter into contracts, transact business, and be a witness. In the case of Leggate v. Clark, 111 Mass. 308, the admission of similar testimony was treated as error. In addition to this, however, these certificates were both dated December 14, 1885, more than two months before the will was made, and are by no means inconsistent with the other testimony that he was released from the asylum as cured February 1, 1886, and that three weeks after that, when he executed the will, he appeared to be of sound and disposing mind and memory.

In addition to the proof of his commitment to the asylum, and of his undoubted insanity prior and for some time subsequent thereto, there was slight evidence of insane acts during the month of February, though there was no opinion expressed by any one that he was incapable of making a valid deed or contract. The whole testimony regarding his insanity was duly submitted to the jury, who were instructed that if they found his insanity to be permanent in its nature and character, the presumptions were that it would continue, and the burden was upon the defendant to satisfy the jury by a preponderance of testimony that he was, at the time of executing the will, of sound mind. There was no error in this instruction.

There were also a large number of exceptions taken to the admission or exclusion of testimony and to the charge of the court, but to consider them in detail would subserve no useful purpose. We have examined them carefully and have come to the conclusion that there was no ruling of the court of which the plaintiffs were entitled to complain. The evidence of insanity was very slight, and there was no legal testimony to show that the will was executed under the pressure of an undue influence.

The judgment of the Court of Appeals is therefore affirmed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

HIGHWAYS—DUTY OF MUNICIPALITY TO KEEP SIDEWALKS FREE FROM OBSTRUCTIONS—DUTY TO LIGHT STREETS.

1. A stepping stone on a sidewalk, near the curb, is not made an unlawful obstruction by the provision of D. C. Rev. Stat., sec. 222, that no portion of the public streets and avenues shall be occupied by any private person, or for any private purpose whatever.
2. The District of Columbia is not charged with the duty so to light a street as to show the presence of a stepping stone on the sidewalk, near the curb, by D. C. Rev. Stat., sec. 233, directing the proper authorities to increase, as the public good may require, the number of street lamps in the city of Washington, and to do any and all things pertaining to the well lighting of the city.—Advance Sheets, February 1, 1905, p. 198.

No. 62.
Argued November 11, 1904. Decided January 3, 1905.

IN ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District, entered on a directed verdict in favor of defendant in an action for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

See same case below, 21 App. D. C. 464; 31 Wash. Law Rep. 257.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John C. Gittings and Mr. D. W. Baker for plaintiff in error.

Mr. E. H. Thomas and Mr. Andrew B. Duvall for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice MCKENNA delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for damages for injury caused to plaintiff in error (who was also plaintiff below) by an alleged negligent omission of duty by the District of Columbia.

On the 27th of October, 1895, about 9 o'clock in the evening, plaintiff had occasion to visit Sangerbund hall, a house on C street, in the city of Washington. On coming out, and for the purpose of approaching a wagon which was standing in the street, he walked rapidly across the sidewalk, and, by falling over a block of stone called a stepping stone or carriage step, which was on the sidewalk near the curb, broke his leg. Some time subsequently he was compelled to submit to its amputation.

The charge against the city was that it was a body corporate and municipal, and had the power, and it was its duty, to keep the sidewalks free of obstructions and nuisances, one of which, it was alleged, said stone was. And further, that it was the duty of the District of Columbia to keep the streets properly lighted. In neglect of both, it was alleged, it did "allow and suffer" the stone to be securely fastened into and remain upon the sidewalk, and did "keep and continue" it there during the night time of the 27th of October, without a light to show its presence, or a watchman to notify wayfarers of its existence. Damages were laid at $25,000. The District of Columbia pleaded not guilty. A jury was impaneled. At the conclusion of the testimony the District moved the court to instruct a verdict for it on the ground that the plaintiff had not made out a case. The motion was granted, and a verdict in accordance with the instructions. A motion for a new trial was made and denied, and the case was then taken to the Court of Appeals, which affirmed the judgment of the court below. 21 App. D. C. 464; 31 Wash. Law Rep. 257.

The first contention of plaintiff in error is that the stone was an unlawful obstruction per se. This is deduced as a consequence from section 222 of the Revised Statutes of the District of Columbia, which reads as follows:

"No open space, public reservation, or other public ground in the city of Washington, nor any portion of the public streets or avenues in said city, shall be occupied by any private person or for any private purpose whatever."

This section can not be construed to prohibit putting upon a street any object without regard to its effect on the use of the street. The sweeping character of such a construction need not be pointed out. There are objects which subserve the use of streets, and can not be considered obstructions to them, although some portion of their space may be occupied. This is illustrated by a number of cases. In Dubois v. Kingston, 102 N. Y. 219, 55 Am. Rep. 804, 6 N. E. 273, a stepping stone 3 feet 4 inches in length and 20 inches wide was placed on the edge of the sidewalk. The court observed that the stone was not of unusual size or located in an improper place, and that it would be extending the liability of cities too far to hold them liable for permitting stepping stones on the edge of sidewalks.

Robert v. Powell, 168 N. Y. 411, 55 L. R. A. 775, 85 Am. St. Rep. 673, 61 N. E. 699, was also an action for injuries caused by a stepping stone. The court said: "There are some objects which may be placed in, or exist in, a public street, such as water hydrants, hitching posts, telegraph poles, awning posts, or stepping stones, such as the one described in this case, which can not be held to constitute a nuisance. They are in some respects incidental to the proper use of the street as a public highway. . . . The stepping stone in this case, located upon the sidewalk in front of a private house, was a reasonable and necessary use of the street, not only for the convenience of the owner of the house, but for other persons who desired to visit or enter the house for business or other lawful purposes."

It was further remarked: "The question involved in this class of cases is whether an object complained of is usual, reasonable, or necessary in the use of the street by the owner of the premises, or anyone else."

Cincinnati v. Fleischer, 63 Ohio St. 229, 234, 58 N. E. 568, 569, also passed upon a city's liability for the existence of a stepping stone upon a sidewalk. The court said: "It [the stone] was within that portion of the street by the curb, which, according to common knowledge, is devoted to carriage blocks, lamps, hitching posts, and shade trees, which pedestrians of ordinary care observe and avoid." And Elster v. Springfield, 49 Ohio St. 82, 96, 30 N. E. 274, was quoted, to the effect that "the laying of sewers, like that of gas and water pipes, beneath the soil, and the erection of lamps and hitching posts, etc., upon the surface, is a street use, sanctioned as such by their obvious purpose and long-continued usage."

It was held in Macomber v. Taunton, 100 Mass. 255, that a hitching post was not a defect in the highway for which the city was liable for permitting it to remain.

Plaintiff in error cites Scranton v. Catterson, 94 Pa. 203, and Davis v. Austin, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 460; 54 S. W. 927.

In the first case an iron water plug in the middle of a street, and projecting above its surface, was held to be a nuisance. Obviously, the case is not in point. The second case sustains the contention of plaintiff in error, but can not be followed against the authority and reasoning of the other cases.

2. The second contention of plaintiff in error is that it was the duty of the District of Columbia to so light the street as to show the presence of the stone thereon, the District having full knowledge thereof. This duty is made to rest mainly upon section 233 of the Revised Statutes of the District of Columbia, which is as follows:

"The proper authorities are directed to increase, from time to time, as the public good may require, the number of street lamps on any of the streets, lanes, alleys, public ways, and grounds in the city of Washington, and to do any and all things pertaining to the well lighting of the city."

This, in one sense, is but another form of the first contention. The duty of a city to especially illuminate a place where an object is, or to put a policeman on guard by it to warn pedestrians, depends upon the object being an unlawful obstruction.

The plaintiff in error can claim nothing from the general duty of the city under the statute to light the streets. The exercise of such duty was necessarily a matter of judgment and discretion, depending upon considerations which this record does not exhibit.

Judgment affirmed.

Carriers—Duty to Look and Listen.—That a flagman at crossing fails to lower the gates as a person approaches the track does not relieve that person of his duty to look for an approaching train.—Van Riper v. New York, S. & W. R. Co., N. J., 59 Atl. Rep. 26.

Master and Servant—Promise of Master to Remove Danger.—The promise of a master to construct an appliance which would remove a danger to which a servant was exposed does not relieve the servant from assumption of the risk, where the danger was imminent and he continued in the work with full knowledge of it. Crum v. North Vernon Pump & Lumber Co., Ind., 72 N. E. Rep. 193.

Accident Insurance—Liability Covering Expenses of Defending Suit.—The extent of the liability of a casualty company determined, under a policy insuring an employer from loss for liability arising from injuries to employees, with respect to the expense of defending a suit brought against the insured.—Cudahy Packing Co. v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co., U. S. C. C., S. D. Iowa, 132 Fed. Rep. 623.

J. B. Larner, Solicitor
In the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, Holding an Equity Court.
Charles Brooks Bailey, Petitioner, v. E. Welsh Ashford, Trustee, et al., Defendants.
Equity. No. 25,094.

The object of this suit is to obtain a release of a deed of trust dated January 13, 1898, and recorded in liber 2287 at folio 189 et seq. of the land records of the District of Columbia, from Oella Chappel, et vir. Loring Chappel, to E. Welsh Ashford and William K. Ellis, trustees, conveying lot 62 in Oella Chappel's subdivision of part of square 911 in the city of Washington, District of Columbia. On motion of the complainant, by his solicitor, John B. Larner, and it appearing to the court that the summons issued herein against the defendant, Anna B. Kendall, has been returned "not to be found," and the non-residence of the said defendant having been proved by affidavit to the satisfaction of the court, it is this 16th day of February, 1905, ordered that the said defendant, Anna B. Kendall, cause her appearance to be entered herein on or before the fortieth day, exclusive of Sundays and legal holidays, occurring after the day of the first publication of this order; otherwise the cause will be proceeded with as in case of default. Provided that this order be published once a week for three successive weeks in The Washington Law Reporter. By the court. THOS. H. ANDERSON, Justice. A true copy. Test: J. R. Young, Clerk, by F. E. Decisions in a number of cases, some of them of especial interest, have been handed down by the Court of Appeals during the present week:

CONSPIRACY IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

In Leonard et al. v. Abner-Drury Brewing Company et al., the suit was brought by two liquor dealers, in behalf of themselves and others, to enjoin an alleged unlawful conspiracy entered into by the defendants to coerce another brewing company, whose action it was alleged had resulted in a reduction in price of brewed and malt liquors, into becoming a member of an association formed by them, and thereby to enhance the price of such liquors, to the injury of complainants. The lower court sustained a demurrer to the bill, on the ground that complainants had no such property interest as they had a right to ask the court to protect, and were not in a position to maintain the suit. The Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Shepard, reverses the decree, holding that proof of the allegations of the bill would entitle complainants to some measure of the relief prayed.

CERTIORARI TO REVIEW TAX SALE.

In Guy v. District of Columbia, the proceeding in the court below was in certiorari to bring up the record of certain assessments and a tax sale thereunder, and for a cancellation of the tax sale. The trial court quashed the writ of certiorari, and its order was affirmed by the Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Morris.

SUIT TO ENFORCE STOCKHOLDERS' LIABILITY FOR UNPAID SUBSCRIPTIONS.

In People's National Bank et al. v. Saville et al., the suit was instituted by certain creditors of an insolvent corporation for the purpose of enforcing against forty-nine defendants, all residing in this District, liability for unpaid subscriptions to its capital stock. The court below held that the suit could not be maintained, as the right of complainants, if any existed, was such as must be enforced, if at all, in a separate suit against each stockholder; and his ruling is affirmed by the Court of Appeals in an opinion by Mr. Justice Morris.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

In Staples v. Johnson the appeal was from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, in an action for malicious prosecution. The plaintiff was employed by defendant as night clerk in a hotel, and as such was intrusted with $10 with which to make change for patrons. He was discharged without previous notice, and at the time was given the money alleged by defendant to be due him, but he claimed a larger amount, and refused to surrender the $10 until that amount was paid. The defendant retained his baggage, and plaintiff had judgment in an action of replevin brought to recover it. The defendant thereupon procured the arrest of plaintiff on a charge of larceny of the $10, and subsequently on a charge of embezzlement. The former charge was nolle prossed, but he was held for the grand jury on the latter, which charge was ignored by them. In the trial court plaintiff had verdict and judgment for $2,500, which was affirmed by the Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Duell, that court saying that the retention by the plaintiff of the $10 was without concealment and under a claim of right evidently made in good faith, and that whether such claim was well founded or not was immaterial.

PERSONAL INJURIES; RELEASE; FRAUD.

In Rockwell v. Capital Traction Company the action was to recover for personal injuries to the female plaintiff. The defendant set up a release of all claims. The plaintiff contended that the release had been obtained by fraud, and at the beginning of the trial tendered to defendant the amount received, but the tender was declined. The trial court held the evidence insufficient to establish the charge of fraud, and directed a verdict for defendant, upon which there was judgment. The Court of Appeals holds the tender to have been made in time, and that the question of fraud in obtaining the release should have been submitted to the jury. The judgment was therefore reversed and a new trial awarded, in an opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Shepard.

EQUITY; LACHES.

In Columbian University et al. v. Taylor et al., the suit was brought by certain heirs of the late Admiral Powell to avoid a trust created by his will, the relief sought being the recovery of certain valuable property, with an accounting for rents and profits. The defendants demurred to the bill on the ground of laches, and were allowed a special appeal from the order overruling the demurrer. The Court of Appeals affirms the order of the court below, in an opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Shepard.

MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES; EXTRA COMPENSATION.

In Myers v. District of Columbia, the plaintiff sought to recover compensation for extra services beyond those included in his employment as janitor at the manual training school. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the declaration, holding that the board of trustees had no power to bind the District by an agreement to pay plaintiff a greater sum than that appropriated for him as janitor, no matter what services he rendered. This ruling the Court of Appeals affirms, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Duell, which reviews the legislation upon the subject.

CITIZENSHIP OF PORTO RICAN.

In U. S. ex rel. Rodriguez v. Bowyer et al., the relator, a Porto Rican, who had been denied by the board of employment of the Washington Navy Yard the right of examination for employment in the yard, on the ground that he was not a citizen of the United States, appealed from an order of the court below dismissing his petition for a writ of mandamus to compel the board to examine him. The Court of Appeals reverses the order, in an opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Shepard, holding that the relator possessed the necessary qualifications as to citizenship under the civil service regulations to make him eligible to employment in the Government service.

SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER; PUBLICATION OF CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE.

In Columbian Correspondence College v. Wynne et al., the appellant, a joint stock company furnishing instruction by the correspondence method, appealed from a decree dismissing its bill to enjoin the officials of the Postoffice Department from revoking a certificate admitting a publication issued by the college to the mails at second-class rates. The Court of Appeals reaffirms its previous ruling in the case of Chicago Business College v. Payne, 30 Wash. Law Rep. 812, and holds that the college, being conducted for private gain, is not an educational institution within the meaning of the act of Congress of July 16, 1894. The opinion of the court was delivered by Mr. Justice Duell.

TRESPASS; STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

In Jackson v. Emmons, the action was in trespass, the facts being fully stated in the opinion on a previous appeal, reported in 30 Wash. Law Rep. 72. There were several trespasses, two of which were barred by the statute of limitations. The trial court limited the right of recovery to the third and last trespass, excluding also a claim for injury to plaintiff's wife occasioned by one of the other trespasses. The Court of Appeals affirms this ruling, in an opinion by M. Justice Morris.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES; BILL OF SALE.

In Morimura v. Samaha, the question was as to whether a bill of sale by dealers in oriental goods had been made with intent to defraud their creditors. The defendant claimed to be a bona fide purchaser, without notice of the fraud. The trial court instructed the jury that if they found that defendant paid money as claimed for the goods, the burden was on the creditors attacking the sale to show that he had actual notice of the fraud of the vendors, or actually suspected it and wilfully abstained from making inquiry to avoid having notice. This the Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Shepard, holds to be error, stating the true rule in such cases to be that if the purchaser has actual knowledge of the fraud, or knowledge of facts sufficient to put a person of ordinary prudence upon inquiry which, if pursued with reasonable diligence, would lead to a discovery of the fraud, then the sale is fraudulent and void.

POLICE REGULATIONS; OBSTRUCTING STREETS.

In Gassenheimer v. District of Columbia, the Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Duell, reverses a conviction of the plaintiff in error, in the Police Court, upon a charge of obstructing the streets in front of his hotel by allowing automobiles for hire to stand there. It is held that a hotel proprietor has the right to have vehicles in front of his premises for the use of his guests; and the fact that one not a guest of the hotel succeeds in hiring one of the vehicles is not of itself sufficient evidence upon which to base a conviction.

LOUIS KANN ET AL., APPELLANTS,
v.
CAROLINE KING.

HENRY RANDALL WEBB, EXECUTOR, ETC., APPELLANT,
v.
CAROLINE KING.

TAXATION; ASSESSMENT IN WRONG NAME; INVALID SALE; REPORT OF SALE; LEASE; FORFEITURE; FAILURE OF LESSEE TO PAY TAXES.

1. The assessment of real estate for taxation in the name of a person who has been dead for 25 years, instead of in the name of the person deriving title to it by inheritance from the deceased and who for the said period of 25 years has been the owner of the property, is not a compliance with the act of August 15, 1894 (28 Stat. 282), providing that all real property shall be assessed for taxation in the name of the owner, or trustee of the owner thereof, and that all undivided property of a deceased person shall be assessed in the name of such decedent until the same has been divided by law, or has passed into the possession of some other person, etc.
2. Failure to assess in the name of the new owner is, in such case, a fatal irregularity which, as between the true owner and the purchaser at a tax sale or his assignee, is sufficient to vitiate all the subsequent proceedings.
3. The law requiring the assessment to be made in the name of the new owner, the taxing officers must ascertain his or her identity as best they can if they would have their proceedings entirely valid and indefeasible.
4. Statutory requirements in the matter of the sale of property for taxes must be strictly pursued in order to divest title.
5. The report of sale made by the collector of taxes, in attempted compliance with the requirements of the act of February 24, 1898 (30 Stat. 250), held insufficient to meet these requirements, and the certificate of sale and the deed issued thereon held null and void.
6. Forfeiture by a lessee of her lease because of failure to pay taxes assessed against the property as required by the lease relieved against where it appeared that the invariable custom of the lessor down to the time of the default had been to demand and receive the amount of the taxes from the lessee and to pay the taxes herself by her own agents, and that for some reason she had failed to make the usual demand for money wherewith to pay the taxes in connection with which the default occurred,—the default of the lessee being excusable under the circumstances.
7. The defense of multifariousness held not available to the defendants,—the testimony disclosing an arrangement between the defendants to use the tax certificate and deed thereunder to oust complainant from the property in order that one of the defendants might become the lessee of it.

Nos. 1456 and 1457. Decided March 8, 1905.

APPEALS by defendants from a decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in Equity, No. 22,684, in suit to enjoin landlord and tenant proceeding, and to have a tax deed declared null and void. Affirmed.

Mr. W. G. Johnson and Mr. Myer Cohen for the appellants Kann et al.

Mr. R. Ross Perry and Mr. R. Ross Perry, Jr., for the appellant Webb.

Mr. J. J. Darlington and Mr. Leon Tobriner for the appellee.

Mr. Justice MORRIS delivered the opinion of the Court:

This case was formerly before this court on an appeal from an interlocutory order awarding an injunction pendente lite (Webb v. King 21, D. C. App. 141: 31 Washington Law Reporter, 79); and the facts as then developed by the pleadings, and which have not been greatly, if at all, modified by the testimony that was subsequently taken, were stated in the opinion then rendered and need not be here repeated at length. The cause comes now before us again on appeal from the final decree, wherein the court below found the issues in accordance with the complainant's bill and decreed in accordance with the prayers of that bill.

The complainant, here the appellee, was the lessee of certain demised premises. Through inadvertence or negligence she permitted certain taxes, which by the lease she was required to pay, to remain in arrears and the property to be sold for the payment of such taxes, and a certificate of sale to be issued therefor, and finally a tax deed to be executed and recorded. For this it was sought to forfeit her lease; and she filed her bill in equity to be relieved from the forfeiture; to enjoin the proceedings that had been instituted to dispossess her; to have the tax certificate and the tax deed declared null and void; and to have the holders of them perpetually enjoined and restrained from setting them up. The paramount question in the case is that of the validity of these tax proceedings; and it will simplify the consideration of the other questions that are raised if we first dispose of this one.

But this question we think the Supreme Court of the United States has already determined for us in the cases of City of Washington v. Pratt, 8 Wheaton, 681; Roukendorff v. Taylor, 4 Pet. 349, and the comparatively recent case of Marx v. Hawthorn, 148 U. S. 172.

1. The act of Congress of August 15, 1894 (28 Stat. 282), which was in force at the time of the tax proceedings in question were had, and which is yet in force, provides that "all real property in the District of Columbia, except as hereinafter provided, shall be assessed (for taxation) in the name of the owner, or trustee or trustees of the owner thereof;" that "all undivided real property of a deceased person may be assessed in the name of such deceased person until the same is divided according to law, or has passed into the possession of some other person or persons;" and that "all real property, the ownership of which is unknown, shall be assessed 'owner unknown.'"

The owner of the property involved in the present litigation was, and had been for upwards of twenty-five years, Mrs. Marianne A. B. Kennedy, who had inherited it in the year 1871 from a relative, Maria T. Gillis. On the assessment books of the District the property continued to be assessed in the name of Maria T. Gillis, although she had died in the year just named, and was advertised and sold in her name for default in the payment of taxes in the year 1899.

Now, it is very clear that this assessment did not comply with the requirement of the act of Congress. A deceased person can not be the owner of property in the sense of the law. Especially can not a deceased person continue for twenty-five years after his death to be the owner of property. Assessment and the other requirements of the tax laws are intended to warn the living owner that his property is being dealt with by the public authorities under their supreme power to divest title in the event of failure to pay the public dues; and that living owner is entitled to the benefit of that warning to its fullest extent and to the most faithful compliance with the provisions of the statute. City of Washington v. Pratt, supra. It will not do, therefore, to take a former owner, and continue his name until it suits the public authorities to change the assessment.

Provision is made by the statute, perhaps inadequate provision, for the ascertainment by the taxing officers of the names of the owners of property for this purpose of assessment; for the recorder of deeds and the register of wills are both required to report annually to the tax officers all transfers of real estate recorded in their respective offices. This does not seem to cover the case of devolution of title by descent, except apparently in the case of a division of an estate and the execution of deeds of partition by the several parties in interest; and it is not apparent what steps the taxing officers are to take to ascertain the living owner of property when the former owner has departed this life, and there is perhaps only one heir and no division of the estate. And yet the law specifically requires such ascertainment of ownership, for it specifically provides that the assessment in the name of the deceased person may not be continued beyond the partition of the estate, or until the estate "has passed into the hands of some other person." The new owner is such other person; and the taxing officers must ascertain his identity as best they can, if they would have their proceedings entirely valid and indefeasible. Such is the positive doctrine of the case of City of Washington v. Pratt. And the result is that failure to assess in such name is a fatal irregularity, which, as between the true owner and the purchaser at a tax sale or his assignee, is sufficient to vitiate all the subsequent proceedings.

Again, in the act of Congress of February 24, 1898 (30 Stat. 250), which regulates the matter of tax sales in this District, there is a provision that, within twenty days after the last day of sale, the collector of taxes shall file in the office of the Recorder of Deeds for the District a report in writing in which he shall give a statement of the property sold, the names of the persons to whom it is assessed, the amount of taxes due thereon, the name of the person to whom it has been sold, the amount for which it has been sold, the cost of sale, the date of sale, and the surplus, if any (act of February 28, 1898, sec. 3). The purpose of all this is very plain. It was to give further and explicit notice to the citizen, whose property was affected and was about to be taken from him, to warn him of his danger, and to give ample information as to what was required to be done in order that he might relieve his property from its predicament. Under this act he is entitled to have all the details of the statute strictly complied with; and a failure of such compliance may suffice to vitiate all the subsequent proceedings.

In the present case the collector of taxes filed a report, which, so far as it relates to the property here in controversy, was as follows:

Date.	Property Sold.	Items of Sale.	Amt. sold for.	Purchaser.
April 13.	.....	.....	.....	C.H. Wiltsie.
	.....	.....	.....	C.H. Wiltsie.
	Square 432.....	2d half of tax for year 1898.	128 50	Do.
	Sub-lot A & imp'ts.	Penalty.....	14 13
	To whom assessed	Watermain tax.
	Maria T. Gillis.	Interest from Assessment for Interest from
		Advertising.....	1 20

Now, it is very plain that this report does not comply with the requirements of the law. There is no statement of the amount of taxes due on the property, or of the cost of sale, or perhaps even of the amount for which it was sold. We might conjecture that the third and fourth columns are to be read together, and that the figures in the fourth column, under the head of "amount sold for," are also intended to indicate the amount of taxes due; but this would be only conjecture, and the statute requires certainty. For many less important defects than this tax sales have been declared void; and it is believed that the universal tendency of decision throughout the States of our Union is that statutory requirements of this character must be strictly pursued in order to divest title. But in view of the decisions in the Supreme Court of the United States already mentioned it is unnecessary to cite further authority.

Various other alleged defects and irregularities have been pointed out in these tax proceedings, but we deem it unnecessary to consider them. The two which have been specified are in our opinion sufficient to vitiate the certificate and the deed that were issued in this case; and we must hold both the certificate and the deed to have been null and void as against the appellee.

2. These instruments being null and void, the matter stands as though they had never been issued—although, of course, they must be regarded as a cloud upon the title of this property, which can be removed in a court of equity; and the situation, therefore, is that there are taxes upon the property in arrears, due and unpaid, for which the lessee is liable, and for the failure to pay which the lessor seeks to enforce a forfeiture of the lease. And the lessee, claiming that her failure to pay at the proper time was the result of inadvertence or misadventure, now offers to pay them, and seeks to be relieved from the forfeiture or threatened forfeiture. This we have already held in our opinion on the former appeal she is entitled to do, if the allegations of her bill are borne out by the testimony in the case.

But the testimony makes it more plain than even the allegations of the bill of complaint did that she is entitled to the relief which she asks. The testimony shows quite conclusively that, while the lease required the annual taxes on the property to be paid by the lessee, yet the invariable custom of the lessor down to the time of the default had been to demand and receive the amount of the taxes from the lessee, and to pay the taxes herself by her own agents.

For the taxes of the second half of the year 1898, in connection with which the default occurred, the lessor failed for some reason to make the usual demand for the money wherewith to pay the taxes; and the lessee was in the midst of financial trouble and distress caused by the recent death of her husband, who had been the lessee down to the time of his death. The record shows to us quite plainly that the default of the lessee was excusable under the circumstances; and that no harm would be done to anyone by her relief from the nominal forfeiture which she has incurred.

3. The defense of multifariousness in the bill of complaint is again insisted on as it was at the former hearing. But we think that what we said at that former hearing must suffice to dispose of the objection now. The determination of that question depends upon the inquiry as to whether there was an arrangement, or understanding, or combination, or whatever we may call it, between the defendants to the suit, whereby the tax certificate that had been issued against the property involved in the proceedings was to be acquired and used in the interest of the Kanns to coerce the appellee out of the property and to enable the Kanns to become the possessors or lessees of it. We find no evidence whatever in the record of any fraud or wrongdoing perpetrated by any one concerned. We only find the evidence of a situation created by keen commercial rivalry and shrewd management, wholly untainted by wrong doing, but still a situation from which injury is threatened to the complainant's rights of property, and against which she is entitled to be relieved. For that there was an arrangement between the defendants whereby the tax certificate was to be used to oust the complainant from the property, we think is too plain to be reasonably questioned. There was undoubtedly a concurrence of effort for that purpose, perhaps no formal combination or preconcerted action. But it matters not what we call it. The undoubted fact is that there was cooperation between the defendants to use the tax certificate to the detriment of the complainant's rights; and there being such cooperation, the defense of multifariousness can not prevail. The one purpose of the bill is to relieve the complainant from the effect of this tax certificate and of the tax title based upon it.

From what we have said it follows in our opinion that the decree appealed from was right and just, and that it should be affirmed, with costs. And it is so ordered.

Affirmed.

FRANK B. SWART, APPELLANT,
v.
JOSEPH S. JUSTH.

CONTRACTS; NEGLIGENCE OF CONTRACTOR; LIABILITY OF OWNER OF BUILDING.

1. Where, at the request or in obedience to the directions of the owner of a building, for whom he had constructed a skylight therein, the contractor undertakes the removal of the old material, he is in so doing the agent or employee of the owner, and the latter is liable for his negligent performance of the work.
2. But where, on completion of his contract for constructing the skylight, the owner makes a gift of the old material to the contractor, who in removing it acts only for himself and without any direction of the owner, the owner is not liable for the negligent manner in which the removal is made by the contractor.

No. 1417. Decided February 7, 1905.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at Law, No. 45,353, entered upon the verdict of a jury in an action for personal injuries. Affirmed.

Mr. Arthur Peter and Mr. Preston B. Ray for the appellant.

Mr. L. Cabell Williamson for the appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice SHEPARD delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff, Frank B. Swart, through the negligent acts of the servants and agents of the defendant, Joseph S. Justh. The declaration is in the ordinary form, and issue was joined on defendant's plea of not guilty.

The evidence is recited as follows in the bill of exceptions:

"Be it remembered, that on the trial of this cause, the plaintiff, in order to maintain the issues on his part joined, gave proof tending to show that the defendant on the 15th day of March, A. D. 1902, and for some time prior thereto, was the owner of premises known as 1805 Fourteenth street, northwest, in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia; that prior to said 15th day of March the defendant had leased the same to Barnet H. Swart, and that the said Barnet H. Swart was on the said last mentioned day, and for some time prior thereto, occupying the same under the said lease, and conducting thereon the flour and feed business; that upon said premises and in the rear thereof there was a stable opening into an alley, which said stable abutted upon said alley; that said Barnet H. Swart used said stable for the accommodation of his horses and wagon, and that his agents and servants were accustomed to pass to and fro, in and upon said alley, for the purpose of gaining access and departing from said stable; that the plaintiff on the said 15th day of March, and prior thereto, was employed by the said Barnet H. Swart as manager and solicitor of aforesaid business, and in the performance of his duties as such he was compelled to be in and upon said premises and in and upon said alley in proximity to said stable; that prior to said 15th day of March, complaint was made to the said defendant of the condition of the roof of said premises, and he was requested to repair the same, and that a few days prior to the said 15th day of March the defendant sent a certain Charles A. Leaman to said premises to repair said roof; that on the said 15th day of March said roof having been repaired by said Leaman the defendant appeared upon said premises with the said Leaman and with a certain Mr. Limpert, and requested permission to go upon the roof of said premises where said repairing had been done, which permission was given to him by William Ray, an agent of the said Barnet H. Swart; that the defendant accompanied by the — Leaman and Limpert went upon the said roof and directed them to remove certain debris lying upon said roof, consisting, among other things, of a number of heavy boards about six feet long and four feet wide, covered with tin and weighing about five hundred pounds, which had been created in the repair of said roof and left thereon; that later in the said day the said Leaman and Limpert by way of removing said boards and tin shoved the same from said roof down upon the plaintiff, who in the proper performance of his duties as manager for the said Barnet H. Swart was then in and upon said alley; that the plaintiff was not aware of the presence of the said Leaman and Limpert upon said roof, and that the said Leaman and Limpert gave no warning before shoving said board and tin from said roof, and that the said Leaman and Limpert could have seen the plaintiff before they shoved said tin and boards from said roof had they looked; that the plaintiff's foot was fractured by the said tin and boards striking him as aforesaid and his head lacerated and other damage done him. The defendant offered evidence tending to show that he contracted with the said Leaman for putting a sky-light on said roof at a cost of six dollars, and that prior to the said 15th day of March he had settled with the said Leaman, who had completed his contract with him; that thereafter on the morning of the 15th Leaman came to the defendant and said to him, 'I would like to have that material on the roof that was left there,' and the defendant said to him: 'You may;' that thereafter the said Leaman, together with the said Limpert, by way of removing said debris threw the same from the roof; that the defendant did not accompany them thereon and gave no directions at any time as to the removal of said debris, and did not know that the accident had happened until several days thereafter; that said debris weighed about fifty pounds and was removed in a one horse dayton wagon. This was the substance of all the evidence offered."

No special instructions were asked by either party, and this evidence was submitted to the jury upon a charge, to which the plaintiff excepted specially. A verdict having been returned for the defendant, the plaintiff has appealed from the judgment entered thereon.

The evidence recited does not warrant an inference that Leaman's contract to put in the skylight covered also the removal of the debris occasioned by its construction. Nor does it appear therefrom that the defendant was under any obligation to his tenant, or to any one else, to remove from the roof of the building the old material left there after the completion of the work contracted for. Hence no question arose as to the liability of defendant, as the owner of the building, for injuries resulting directly from acts which the contractor was authorized or required to do, as in Water Co. v. Ware, 16 Wall. 566, 576, and other like cases.

But two material issues were presented by the evidence. The first was, whether, after the completion of his contract for the construction of the skylight Leaman had undertaken the removal of the old material at the request, or in obedience to the directions of the defendant. If so, the jury were correctly charged that he was acting as the agent or employee of the defendant in such manner as to render the latter liable for his negligent performance, whether or not he had himself been present and in actual direction of the work.

The second was whether Leaman's contract having been completely performed, he became the owner of the old material by gift of the defendant, and in its removal acted for himself alone without any direction from the defendant. If they should so find from the evidence, then the jury were properly instructed that the defendant would not be liable for Leaman's negligence in removing his own property in his own way.

Had the gift to Leaman been coupled with the requirement of removal, then defendant might have been liable for his acts. Burke v. Shaw, 59 Miss. 443. But there is nothing in the evidence warranting the application of the principle of that case, by way of instruction to the jury, and there is no occasion either to affirm or deny it.

Having found no error in the charge of the court, the judgment must be affirmed with costs; and it is so ordered.

Affirmed.

WILSON GRAY HAWLEY, APPELLANT,

v.

COLUMBIA RAILWAY COMPANY.

NEGLIGENCE; CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE; DIRECTING VERDICT.

1. The contributory negligence of a person injured will not defeat a recovery if the defendant by reasonable care and prudence might have avoided the consequence of such contributory negligence.
2. Plaintiff, while seeking to board a car of an electric street railway company at one of its regular stopping places, was struck by a car of another company (the defendant). At the point of the accident the tracks of the two companies were distant from each other four feet and ten inches; but when there was a car on each track the space between them was only sixteen or eighteen inches. It appeared from the testimony for plaintiff that the motorman on defendant's car was not looking ahead and had hold neither of the controller nor of the brake, but was leaning over engaged in pulling up the fender on his car. Held, that the case was one falling within the rule above stated and was one proper to be submitted to the jury, and a judgment for defendant upon a verdict directed by the trial court on the ground that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence reversed, distinguishing Chunn v. Railway Co., 32 Wash. Law Rep. 344.

No. 1424. Decided February 7, 1905.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at Law, No. 45,293, entered upon a verdict directed by the court in an action to recover for personal injuries. Reversed.

Mr. George E. Hamilton and Mr. M. J. Colbert for the appellant.

Mr. C. C. Cole and Mr. R. S. Huidekoper for the appellee.

Mr. Justice MORRIS delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is a suit instituted in the Supreme Court of the District by the appellant here as plaintiff to recover compensation for personal injuries sustained by him in consequence of being struck near the intersection of Fourteenth street and New York avenue in this city by a car of the appellee company, through the alleged negligence of the employees of this company.

The appellant was seeking to board a car of the Capital Traction Company, which was about to turn from New York avenue into Fourteenth street to go north on the latter street, and which at that point came to a stop in order to discharge and receive passengers. He had come out into the street from the sidewalk on the southern side, and had taken his station between the south track of the Capital Traction Company and the north track of the Columbia Railway Company, the outer rails of which are here 4 feet and 10 inches distant from each other. Notwithstanding that when two cars come abreast of each other at this point the space is very narrow, the place, under the usage of the Capital Traction Company and the municipal regulations of the District of Columbia, had become a usual place for the stoppage of the cars of this latter company for the purpose indicated, but not for the cars of the Columbia Railway Company, of which the stopping place was on the east side of Fourteenth street. The circumstances of the accident, which resulted in the injury to the appellant, are thus stated by the motorman of the car which he was seeking to board:

"I got to Fourteenth street and New York avenue on that day at 5.28 p.m., and stopped to take on passengers. As I stopped there was a Columbia car just passing over the Metropolitan tracks on Fourteenth street, going west. The motorman of that car was busy hooking up his fender, and he struck Hawley. He did not have hold of the controller at all, and I hardly think he had hold of the brake. No, he did not have hold of the brake. He was leaning over the dash-board, pulling up the fender, and had one hand resting on the dash and the other one hold of the fender. He pulled up the fender with one hand and hooked it with the other, and by that time he looked up and saw Hawley, and almost at the same time he struck him. When Mr. Hawley was hit he was standing between the Capital Traction track and the Columbia track. He was looking west and walking west. My car was full of people."

And Hawley himself testified about the matter in these words:

"The Fourteenth street car was pretty well crowded, but I did not notice any one standing on the running board. The Fourteenth street car had stopped before I was struck. It had stopped possibly a few seconds, and I was walking along looking for a seat, or rather a place to get on, when I was hit. I had not taken hold of the upright, or stepped upon the running board, but was in the act of raising my hand to grab hold of the upright when I was hit. I had not stepped up at all—I was just in the act."

At the trial, upon the conclusion of the plaintiff's testimony, the defendant, adducing no testimony on its own behalf, moved the court to direct a verdict in its favor, it is understood, on the ground of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff; and the motion was allowed, and a verdict directed for the defendant, upon which there was judgment.

From this judgment the plaintiff has appealed.

That there was ample evidence to go to the jury on the question of the defendant's negligence, if that were the only issue in the case, is too clear to need elaboration. What we have already cited was amply sufficient for the purpose. But it is upon the supposed showing of contributory negligence by the plaintiff on his own part that it is sought to sustain the ruling of the trial court. And the case of Chunn v. City and Suburban Railway Company, 23 App. D. C. 551: 32 Wash. Law Rep. 344, in which we probably carried the doctrine of contributory negligence to its extreme limit, so far as it removed the cause from the consideration of the jury, is cited in support of the contention.

We think there were some important distinctions between the Chunn case and that now before us. In the Chunn case it was not at all certain that the injured person had the right to stand or be in the place where she was injured—some planks laid down between the two tracks of the defendant company's railroad, and apparently only used as a platform by a kind of sufferance or tolerance of the employees of the company. But principally it appeared that there was amply sufficient distance, 7 feet and 10 inches, between the nearest rails of the two tracks, leaving 3 feet and 6 inches by actual measurement between two cars standing abreast on the two tracks—a space abundantly sufficient for a person proposing to board a passing car to stand on and from which he might enter in safety, if, as the testimony was, he was careful to see what he was doing. It was only because the plaintiff in that case was careless in what she was doing that she went beyond the limit of safety and was injured.

In the present case the plaintiff was where he was entitled to be. It was the usual place for passengers to alight from and to enter the cars of the Capital Traction Company at that point. But the place was of very much smaller dimensions. The outer rails of the tracks of the two railway companies were only 4 feet and 10 inches distant from each other, and the testimony is that when the cars stand abreast of each other there, there is only about 16 or 18 inches between them, and "that unless a man is standing sideways he is very apt to be hit with cars on both sides of him." If in such a situation a high degree of care was required of the appellant, so was there a commensurate degree of care required of the appellee, and it was not competent for the latter to run the former down and maim or kill him, when the motorman, with the exercise of reasonable care and prudence, could have guarded against the result of the plaintiff's contributory negligence, if such there was.

We are of opinion that the case before us falls within the rule laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Grand Trunk Railway Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, and in the case of Inland and Seaboard Coasting Co. v. Tolson, 139 U. S. 551, wherein it was held that the contributory negligence of a person injured will not defeat his action if the defendant by reasonable care and prudence might have avoided the consequence of such contributory negligence. Here the motorman of the defendant company had ample opportunity to guard against the accident if he had been using even ordinary care and prudence and attending to the proper performance of his duty, which he evidently was not doing, if the testimony of the plaintiff's witnesses is to stand unimpeached. At one of the most dangerous crossings in the city of Washington he was not looking ahead, as he should have looked, and he had abandoned all control both of the controller and of the brake of the car.

It will not do in a case of this kind to hold the plaintiff as the sole author of his own misfortune, when the defendant, by the use even of ordinary care and prudence, could have avoided the accident, even after the contributory negligence had supervened.

We are of opinion that the case was one proper to be submitted to a jury under suitable instructions, and that it was error to withdraw it from their consideration.

The judgment appealed from must be reversed, with costs; and the cause will be remanded with directions to vacate the judgment and the verdict, and to award a new trial. And it is so ordered.

NEELY ELECTRIC CONSTRUCTION AND SUPPLY COMPANY, APPELLANT,

v.

HENRY C. BROWNING ET AL.

APPEALS; TRANSCRIPT OF RECORD; APPEAL DISMISSED.

1. Where, on appeal from a judgment rendered by the trial court, sitting without a jury, the record discloses neither bill of exceptions, nor requests for finding of ultimate facts, nor agreed statement of facts signed by the parties or by their attorneys, but merely a certification by the trial justice of the evidence produced before him and the judgment thereon, the appeal will be dismissed.
2. Where a trial by jury has been waived a question of fact determined by the trial court is not reviewable on appeal.

No. 1427. Decided February 7, 1905.

APPEAL by petitioner from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, No. 45,682, dismissing a petition to have certain property levied upon by the marshal declared the property of petitioner. Dismissed.

Mr. James B. Archer, Jr., and Mr. D. W. Baker for the appellant.

Mr. A. A. Hoehling, for the appellees.

Mr. Justice DUELL delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is an appeal from a judgment rendered after trial before a justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, sitting without a jury, in favor of the appellees, dismissing a petition filed by the appellant, that certain property levied upon by the marshal of the District of Columbia, under an execution issued after judgment had been recovered by these appellees against one Charles H. Neely, be declared to be its property.

To sustain its claim of title the appellant gave evidence and testimony, and in turn the appellees gave testimony and evidence to maintain the issue on their part.

In view of the disposition we decide to make of the case it becomes unnecessary to set forth or refer to the nature and extent of the proofs adduced.

The appellees moved to dismiss the appeal, or, in the alternative, to affirm the judgment from which the appeal was taken. The consideration of that motion was postponed to the time of the hearing of the appeal.

After careful consideration we have decided that the appeal can be best disposed of by taking up and deciding the motion.

Appellees based their motion upon certain grounds which are thus set forth:

"No exceptions whatever were taken by appellant to any of the rulings of the trial court; no requests for findings of ultimate facts were submitted upon which an exception could have been reserved upon refusal by the court to so find, and no bill of exceptions of any kind is contained in the record—the transcript filed being a mere certification by the trial justice of the evidence produced before him and the judgment entered thereon, as will appear from a mere inspection of said transcript."

An examination of the record discloses that this statement is correct in fact, and if such facts are sufficient in law to warrant the dismissal of the appeal, or an affirmance of the judgment, there exists no good reason why we should not so dispose of it.

As has been stated, the record discloses neither bill of exception nor requests for finding of ultimate facts, nor agreed statement of facts signed by the parties or by their attorneys. It contains what is termed a "Certified Statement of Testimony and Proceedings," which is certified by the trial judge in the following words: "I certify that the foregoing is an accurate statement of the testimony and proceedings in the cause." Such report of the trial judge is not the equivalent of a bill of exceptions, special verdict, or an agreed statement of facts. Suydam v. Williamson, 20 How. 427.

In Trust Co. v. New Mexico, 183 U. S. 535, at page 540, the court said: "An agreed statement of facts may be the equivalent of a special verdict or a finding of facts upon which a reviewing court may declare the applicable law, if such agreed statement is of ultimate facts; but if it be merely a recital of testimony, or evidential fact, it brings nothing before an appellate court for consideration." . . . "The certified statement of facts is insufficient, and presents nothing for examination."

But it is urged on behalf of the appellant that heretofore this court has been lenient in taking jurisdiction of cases where the records were faulty, and reference is made to Wilkins & Co. v. Hillman, 8 App. D. C. 469: 24 Wash. Law Rep. 300. In that case it was expressly stated that there were special circumstances which induced the court to take jurisdiction, notwithstanding that it was there stated that the proper mode for bringing up cases of this kind for review was by bill of exceptions. It was plainly said, at page 476, that "our decision in this instance is not to be drawn into a precedent for the government of future cases." It is neither fair to the trial court nor to litigants that plain and well-settled rules of practice should be ignored. The power to do so, conceding it to exist in the appellate court, should only be exercised, if at all, in extreme cases where otherwise there would be a plain miscarriage of justice.

No such reason is disclosed in the case at bar.

No good purpose would be subserved by attempting to go into the consideration of the testimony, for this court has held in the recent case of Shelley v. Westcott, 23 App. D. C. 135: 32 Wash. Law Rep. 68, that in a case where a trial by jury has been waived a question of fact determined by the trial court is not reviewable by this court. It follows that any such consideration of the case would inevitably compel us to affirm the judgment of the trial court.

We must hold that this case is not properly before this court for review.

The appeal must be dismissed, with costs. And it is so ordered.

BENJAMIN KLOPFER, APPELLANT,
v.
THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

APPELLATE PRACTICE; TRANSCRIPT OF RECORD; DEFECTIVE SIDEWALK; MASTER AND SERVANT; SPECIAL POLICEMAN.

1. In order that an appellate tribunal may pass intelligently upon the ruling of a trial court, the record must give, and purport to give, the substance of all the testimony bearing upon such ruling.
2. A record, although not expressly purporting to give all the testimony in the case, held sufficient where, after detailing the testimony of witnesses on both sides, it stated that "counsel for both plaintiff and defendant announced that they had no further testimony to offer, and rested their case," and it was not contended that any substantial testimony was omitted.
3. The fact that a watchman, employed by private persons at their own expense to guard their property at night, is, to enable him to perform his duties in that regard and for that purpose alone, commissioned as a private on the police force, but without compensation from the District, will not of itself defeat his right to recover for injuries sustained by him by stepping into a hole in the sidewalk negligently permitted to exist after notice thereof to the municipal authorities.

No. 1446. Decided February 7, 1905.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at Law, No. 47,243, entered upon a verdict directed by the court in an action for personal injuries. Reversed.

Mr. C. H. Merrillat and Mr. W. E. Ambrose for the appellant.

Mr. A. B. Duvall and Mr. E. H. Thomas for the appellee.

Mr. Justice MORRIS delivered the opinion of the Court:

The appellant is or was a private watchman by night, commissioned as a private in the Metropolitan Police force, but without compensation from the District of Columbia, and employed at their own charge and cost by private persons to guard their private property. While so employed, a little before midnight on the evening of February 16, 1903, he was injured by stepping into a hole in the sidewalk of C street northwest, near Twelfth street, which had existed for several months, and which had been caused by bricks becoming loose and missing. The hole was about the depth of a brick and the size of it was from four to seven or eight bricks. On the evening in question the hole was covered with snow; and it was by stepping on a loose brick on the edge of it, which turned over, that the appellant was injured. He himself had noticed the defective condition of the street for several months prior to the accident, and had reported it to the nearest station to which he was in the habit of reporting. He knew that there was a hole about that place; but at the time of the accident it was so covered with snow that he could not then see it.

Under these circumstances and conditions, the appellant as plaintiff entered suit in the Supreme Court of the District against the District of Columbia, on the ground of the alleged negligence by the latter, to recover compensation for the injuries sustained by him. At the trial he and other witnesses on his behalf testified substantially to the facts stated. There was testimony also on behalf of the defendant that some workmen for the District had repaired one or two holes at the place designated about three weeks or upwards before the time of the accident to the plaintiff. At the conclusion of the testimony, counsel for the defendant moved the court to direct a verdict in favor of the District, on the ground that the accident was the result of the plaintiff's own negligence; and the court sustained the motion, instructed the jury to return a verdict for the defendant, and thereupon entered judgment forthwith. From this judgment the plaintiff has appealed.

A preliminary question has been raised here by the appellee, on whose behalf it is contended that the record does not purport to contain the whole testimony in the case, or the substance of it; and therefore that nothing remains to this court but to affirm the judgment of the trial court. It does not seem that this criticism upon the contents of the record is wholly unfounded; and we have repeatedly had occasion to animadvert upon the loose and insufficient manner in which bills of exception have been prepared when it is the intention of parties to state in them the substance of the whole testimony, and yet fail in specific terms so to do. It is elementary law that, in order that an appellate tribunal may pass intelligently upon the ruling of a trial court, the record must give and must purport to give the substance of all the testimony bearing upon such ruling; and when the ruling is upon the whole testimony, as when a verdict is directed either for the plaintiff or for the defendant, the record must give and must purport to give the substance of all the testimony—although, of course, testimony not bearing upon the ruling, as, for example, medical testimony as to the nature and extent of a plaintiff's injuries, need not be given.

But, although the record in the present case is not free from just criticism in this regard, yet we think, in view of its general tenor, that it should be accepted as sufficient. It states, after the detail of the testimony of witnesses on both sides, that "counsel for both plaintiff and defendant announced that they had no further testimony to offer, and rested their case;" and it is not contended as a matter of fact, on behalf of the appellee, that any substantial testimony needed for the disposition of the case has been omitted.

The motion of the defendant on which the jury was peremptorily requested and instructed to render a verdict in favor of the District of Columbia was expressly based on the fact that the plaintiff was a policeman in the employment of the District of Columbia, and therefore, as we infer, presumably not entitled to recover for any negligence on the part of the municipality. But we do not so understand the law to be; and we think that there was error in the ruling of the trial court in this regard.

The plaintiff was a policeman, it is true, and may perhaps be regarded as having been in the employment of the District of Columbia, and subject to all the rules and regulations which govern the police force of the District, so far as they are applicable to his case. But it is very plain that he was only a special policeman for a special purpose, and not subject to the performance of the general duties of a policeman, in the ordinary sense of that term. And yet it is argued in all seriousness in this case that "it was the duty of the plaintiff to observe the condition of this sidewalk, which was on his beat, and to see that no defects or obstructions were suffered to remain thereon, and to remove such obstruction or defect at once, and, if necessary, display a lantern from such guard as he may provide, and to make an immediate report to the lieutenant of police, to be forwarded to the police headquarters."

It is very clear that there was no such duty imposed upon the plaintiff. He was employed for one sole purpose, that of guarding from depredation the property of those who paid him for his services. For this purpose alone, and to enable him to perform his duty in that regard, he received a commission from the District of Columbia as policeman. To say that he was required to keep in repair the streets within his beat, or rather within the district to which his employment was restricted, we would be compelled to regard as an absurdity. Whatever duty there was upon him in the premises with regard to the condition of the sidewalk he fully performed it when he reported that condition to the station master at the next police station. Thereafter he was as much entitled to recover for any injuries that might be suffered by him as any other citizen would be. Nor would there seem to be any reason why the law between employer and employee should not be applied here, which requires that the employer should provide a reasonably safe place and reasonably safe appliances for the performance by the employee of the duties of his employment.

There is no place here for the application of the doctrine that an employee must take the risk of his employment and the risk of the negligence of his fellow servants. There is presented simply the case of one injured by the negligence of the municipality after ample notice to the municipality of the existence of the dangerous thing which caused the injury. There is no case of coemployment in the sense of the law to relieve the employer from liability. Kimball v. Boston, 1 Allen, 417; Turner v. Indianapolis, 96 Ind. 52; American and English Encyclopædia of Law, title, Master and Servant, second edition, vol. 20, p. 91, and notes.

We are clearly of opinion that this case should have been submitted to a jury, and that it was error to withdraw it from them.

The judgment appealed from will therefore be reversed, with costs, and the cause will be remanded to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, with directions to vacate the verdict and judgment therein entered, and to award a new trial. And it is so ordered.

MARTHA I. HUNT, PLAINTIFF IN ERROR, v. SPRINGFIELD FIRE AND MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY.

INSURANCE—CONDITION AGAINST CHATTEL MORTGAGE.

A condition in a policy of fire insurance for the unconditional and sole ownership of the property by the insured, and for the non-existence of any chattel mortgage thereon, was broken where certain trust deeds of the property had been executed to secure payment of money, whose legal effect is practically the same as that of a chattel mortgage with power of sale.—Advance Sheets, U. S. S. C., p. 179.

No. 65.

Argued December 1, 2, 1904. Decided December 19, 1904.

IN ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District in favor of defendant in an action on a policy of insurance. Affirmed.

See same case below, 30 Wash. Law Rep. 636.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

This was an action to recover on a policy of insurance upon household furniture and ornaments.

Defense: That it was provided that the policy should be void if the interest of the insured was other than the unconditional and sole ownership of the property insured, or if the "said property should be or become encumbered by a chattel mortgage," when in fact it was subject, at the time the policy was written, to three trust deeds to secure the payment of various sums of money. Plaintiff demurred to the pleas setting up this defense. The court overruled the demurrer, entered judgment for the defendant, which was affirmed by the Court of Appeals. 20 App. D. C. 48: 30 Wash. Law Rep. 636.

Mr. John C. Gittings and Mr. D. W. Baker for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Andrew B. Duvall for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice BROWN delivered the opinion of the Court:

The sole question presented by the record in this case is whether the provision in the policy for the unconditional ownership of the property by the plaintiff, and for the non-existence of any chattel mortgage thereon, was broken by certain trust deeds to secure the payment of money in each case.

Plaintiff relies upon the familiar principle of law that the conditions of a policy of insurance, prepared, as they are, by the company, and virtually thrust upon the insured, frequently without his knowledge, must be construed strictly, and, while the legal effect of a chattel mortgage and of a deed of trust to secure the payment of money may be practically the same, they are in law different instruments; and that a condition against one is not broken by the existence of the other. We recognize the rule laid down by this court in Thompson v. Phenix Ins. Co., 136 U. S. 287, 34 L. ed. 408, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1019, that in case of attempted forfeiture, if the policy be fairly susceptible of two constructions, the one will be adopted which is more favorable to the insured. This rule was reiterated in McMaster v. New York L. Ins. Co., 183 U. S. 25, 46 L. ed. 64, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10, but we can not recognize it as applicable to this case.

A deed of trust and chattel mortgage with power of sale are practically one and the same instrument as understood in this District. In the language of Mr. Justice Morris, in speaking of mortgages of real estate in Middleton v. Parke, 3 App. D. C. 149:

"The deed of trust is the only form of mortgage that has been in general use in the District of Columbia for many years. The common-law mortgage is practically unknown with us; and everyone understands that, when a mortgage of real estate here is spoken of, the deed of trust is what is intended. . . . The deed of trust is here used as the equivalent of a mortgage; and so the term is universally used by the community. Indeed, while a mortgage is not necessarily, perhaps, a deed of trust, a deed of trust to secure the loan of money is necessarily a mortgage."

It was said by this court in Shillaber v. Robinson, 97 U. S. 68-78, 24 L. ed. 967-970, that, "if there is a power of sale, whether in the creditor or in some third person to whom the conveyance is made for that purpose, it is still in effect a mortgage, though in form a deed a trust; and may be foreclosed by sale in pursuance of the terms in which the power is conferred, or by suit in chancery."

The legal effect of the two instruments has been recognized as practically the same in several cases in this and other courts. Platt v. Union P. R. Co., 99 U. S. 48-57, 25 L. ed. 424-427; Palmer v. Gurnsey, 7 Wend. 248; Eaton v. Whiting, 3 Pick. 484; Wheeler & W. Mfg. Co. v. Howard, 28 Fed. 741; Bartlett v. Teah, 1 McCrary, 176, 1 Fed. 768; Southern P. R. Co. v. Doyle, 8 Sawy. 60, 11 Fed. 253; McLane v. Paschal, 47 Tex. 365.

There may be cases under particular statutes recognizing a difference between them in reference to the application of the recording laws, as appears to be the case in Maryland (Charles v. Clagett, 3 Md. 82), but in their essential features and in their methods of enforcement they are practically identical. Both are transfers conditioned upon the payment of a sum of money; both are enforceable in the same manner, and the difference between them is one of name rather than substance. The provision in the policy is one for the protection of the insurer, who is entitled, if he insists upon it in his questions, to be apprised of any fact which qualifies or limits the interest of the insured in the property, and would naturally tend to diminish the precautions he might take against its destruction by fire.

In passing upon the identity of the two instruments in this case we may properly refer to the further provision of the policy that the interest of the insured must be an unconditional and sole ownership. While the breach of this condition is not specifically urged in the briefs, we may treat it as explanatory of the other condition against the existence of a chattel mortgage. The company evidently intended by this provision to protect itself against conditional transfers of every kind. The contract of the company is a personal one with the insured, and it is not bound to accept any other person to whom the latter may transfer the property.

The conditions of the policy in this case were broken by the trust deeds, and the judgment of the court below is, therefore, affirmed.

THE truth of the following is vouched for by a Michigan correspondent, says Law Notes: An Irish drayman in a small village in Michigan was elected constable. The morning after election, while doing his customary business with a pair of old horses that had seen many better days, and with a long stick for a whip jabbing first one and then the other, he was heard to say: "Git up here, git up, yez lazy ould crow baits, git up. I niver seed the like of yez before. I'll have yez arrested for resisting an officer of the la."

A WESTERN judge recently sentenced a man to imprisonment for life. Before removal from the court of the prisoner he exclaimed that the judge was no gentleman. The indignant jurist promptly added two years to the sentence.

Death of Hon. Charles C. Cole.

The members of the bar of the District were shocked to learn of the death of Hon. Charles C. Cole, which occurred at his home in this city on Friday morning, March 17, 1905. His illness had been of brief duration, and no serious result was apprehended; but sudden complications ensued and caused his death.

Judge Cole's death removes from the ranks of the District bar one of its most prominent members. His career in this District has been one of exceptional distinction. After serving with signal ability as United States attorney for the District of Columbia, he was, in February, 1893, appointed as an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the District, in succession to Mr. Justice Charles P. James. He presided, from time to time, in each of the several branches of that court, hearing and determining some of the most important cases brought before it, and earning for himself an enviable reputation as a judge. His service on the bench extended over a period of eight years, when, to the regret of his associates on the bench and the bar, as well as the community generally, he resigned to resume the active practice of the law in this city. He became the senior member of the firm of Cole & Donaldson, and speedily secured a large and remunerative practice. He was a man of untiring industry, thoroughly devoted to his profession, and counting no sacrifice of time and strength too great in the interests of a client; and it is more than probable that the intensity and constancy of his labors made him a ready victim to the disease which fastened upon him.

Judge Cole enjoyed the cordial respect and esteem of his brethren at the bar, to many of whom his death brings with it a sense of personal loss.

Decedent's Estates—Primary Fund for Payment of Mortgage Debt.

A ruling of much interest was recently made by Mr. Justice Stafford, holding the Probate Court, in the matter of the estate of Caroline Jenkins Harris, deceased. A petition was presented by the husband of the decedent asking to have the personal estate declared free from the payment of a debt secured by deed of trust upon a parcel of real estate. It appeared from the allegations of the petition, which was demurred to, that the trust was placed on the property by one Lewis, the notes secured thereby being endorsed by the decedent before delivery, and that subsequently Lewis sold and conveyed the property, subject to the trust, to the decedent, who died before the maturity of the notes. The personal estate of the decedent being insufficient to pay debts, including that secured by the deed of trust, the real estate was sold by the administrator, and the petition alleged that the administrator in his account was about to reimburse himself for the payment of the trust debt out of the personal estate, thereby depriving the petitioner thereof, inasmuch as the trust debt was greater in amount than the whole of the personal estate after payment of the personal debts. His right to do this was denied, and it was contended for the petitioner that the trust debt should be paid from the proceeds of the trust property, which were sufficient for the purpose; and that the balance of the personal estate in the hands of the administrator belonged of right to the petitioner, as husband of the decedent, under section 1160, Code D. C. As stated above, the petition was demurred to, but Mr. Justice Stafford, in an interesting opinion which we hope to report in full at an early day, adjudged the petition sufficient, holding that, taking the facts to be as stated in the petition, the debt secured by the deed of trust should be paid from the proceeds of sale of the trust property, and not from the personal estate. He therefore overruled the demurrer. Mr. E. Hilton Jackson appeared for the petitioner and Mr. R. H. McNeill for the respondents.

Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

ANNIE C. GUTHRIE, APPELLANT, v. JANE E. WELCH ET AL.

PROBATE COURT; LETTERS AD COLLIGENDUM; REMOVAL OF COLLECTOR.

1. It is within the sound judicial discretion of the Supreme Court of the District, holding the Probate Court, to remove at will a collector of an estate to whom letters ad colligendum have been issued; and its exercise of that discretion will not be reviewed except where there has been an abuse of it.
2. The removal of a collector appointed pending a will contest on the ground that she is interested in the result of the litigation, is not an abuse of the discretion vested in the Probate Court.

No. 1498. Decided February 7, 1905.

APPEAL from an order of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, holding the Probate Court, Adminstration No. 11,532, removing a collector for the estate of a decedent. Affirmed.

Mr. Burton Macafee, Mr. Andrew Wilson, and Mr. N. W. Barksdale for the appellant.

Mr. C. C. Cole, Mr. R. Golden Donaldson, and Mr. W. B. Reilly for the appellees.

Mr. Justice MORRIS delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is an appeal from an order of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, sitting as a probate court, and the question involved in the case is whether that court has authority under the law to remove a collector whom it has appointed for the estate of a deceased person, pending proceedings over a caveat that had been filed against the last will and testament of such deceased person; on the ground that such collector was interested in the litigation and should be a disinterested party.

The facts in brief are these: One Ann E. Coates died in this city on May 15, 1903. After her death, a paper writing purporting to be her last will and testament was offered for probate by Mary Teresa Spalding and Annie C. Guthrie, who were named in it as executrices. They were two out of eleven persons named in the proceedings as being the heirs at law and next of kin of the deceased. Two others of the eleven filed a caveat to the alleged will, on the usual grounds of fraud, undue influence, and the mental incapacity of the deceased to make a valid will. Thereupon, in view of the litigation thus initiated, Annie C. Guthrie was appointed collector of the estate of the deceased, and entered upon the performance of her duties. Petition was filed by the two caveators named for her removal on the ground that the collector should be a wholly disinterested person and neither a legatee nor a distributee of the estate. The prayer of the petition was denied by the court.

Subsequently Annie C. Guthrie filed an account as collector. The two caveators, who are the appellees here, objected to this account and asked for her removal from the office of collector, on the ground, as alleged, that she had concealed and secreted assets of the estate to the amount of $1,234.96. This sum, so claimed to be assets of the estate, appears to have been money deposited in a trust institution or savings bank in this city by Ann E. Coates, which was drawn out by Annie C. Guthrie, in April, 1903, upon a check dated April 1, 1903, and executed and delivered to Annie C. Guthrie by Ann E. Coates, as a voluntary gift from the latter to the former, as claimed by the donee, Annie C. Guthrie. This alleged gift was made on the second day subsequent to that on which the will purports to bear date, which was March 30, 1903; and the appellees claim that the same mental incapacity existed on both dates as to the deceased Ann E. Coates.

Upon the petition of the appellees and the answer thereto of the appellant, who claimed that this money was not part of the assets of the estate, but was her own by voluntary gift from the deceased, the probate court, on the ground, as stated in the order, "that the said Annie C. Guthrie is interested in the pending litigation and some disinterested party ought to be appointed in her place and stead," removed the appellant from the collectorship, and appointed a local trust company to the office. Annie C. Guthrie has prosecuted the present appeal from the order.

It is to be noted that, neither in the order for the removal of the appellant from the office of collector of the estate of the deceased, nor in any other order to be found in the record before us, is there any adjudication by the court below of the question of concealment of assets that was raised by the petition of the appellees; and that the removal of the appellant is based, not upon any such concealment, but upon the impropriety of the collectorship being vested in one interested in the litigation. It is argued on behalf of the appellant that a collector can not be removed for any such cause, or for any cause whatever other than certain specified causes mentioned in the Code.

In reference to the powers of the probate court, the Code provides that "the special term of the Supreme Court, heretofore known as the Orphan's Court, shall be designated the probate court, and the justice holding said court shall have and exercise all the powers and jurisdiction by law held and exercised by the Orphans' Court of Washington County, District of Columbia, prior to the 21st day of June, A. D. 1870" (section 116). And section 119 provides that "it (the probate court) shall have full power and authority to take the proof of wills of either personal or real estate and admit the same to probate and record, and for cause to revoke the probate thereof; to grant and, for any of the causes hereinafter mentioned, to revoke letters testamentary, letters of administration, letters ad colligendum, and letters of guardianship, and to appoint a successor in the place of any one whose letters have been revoked, etc., etc., etc."

From this section 119, and from the expression used therein that for any of the causes thereinafter mentioned letters testamentary, letters of administration, letters ad colligendum, and letters of guardianship might be revoked by the probate court, it might justly be inferred that it was the intention of the framers of the Code to enumerate specifically thereinafter the several causes for which such revocation might be had. But nowhere in the Code do we find any specific enumeration of such causes. Indeed it would seem that thereafter there is only incidental reference to the matter of revocation of letters, when it is mentioned in sections 122, 123, 124, 125, and 126 as one of the penalties that may be imposed for failure to invest funds as directed by the court; or for concealment of assets of the estate; or for misconduct of a joint executor, administrator, or collector; or for failure to render an inventory or account. The contention of the appellant is that these four specified causes, and these alone, although thus only incidentally mentioned, are the only causes for which letters may be revoked by the probate court. But we can not assent to the justice of this contention.

While the probate court is one of expressly limited jurisdiction, although the special limitation upon its authority contained in the Maryland Act of 1798, chap. 101, subchap. 15, sec. 20, that "the Orphans' Court shall not, under pretext of incidental power or constructive authority, exercise any jurisdiction whatever not expressly given by this act or some other law," has been omitted from our Code, yet it must be assumed that every court has all the authority necessarily implied in the act of its creation. The administration of the estates of deceased persons is a matter committed by our system of jurisprudence almost wholly to courts of probate, by whatever name they may be called; and the conservation of those estates and their ultimate delivery to those entitled to receive them are the main purposes for which such courts have been established. In the contests which only too frequently occur over the validity of wills and the rights of executors therein named, and in the contests which occasionally arise as to the question of administration in the absence of a will or of an executor, the probate court is authorized to appoint collectors, who are in the nature of temporary administrators with more or less limited powers. Such appointment seems to have been originally assumed by probate courts as a matter of necessity. With us it has been long sanctioned by law; and section 304 of the Code, whereby it is expressly authorized, is no more than the reenactment of previously existing statute. See act of Maryland of 1798, chap. 101.

Differently from an executor, who receives his authority from the will of the deceased, and from the administrator, who, although he derives his authority immediately from the court, yet is usually pointed out by the statute and is entitled as a matter of right, unless there is objection to him, a collector derives his appointment and authority wholly from the court. He is merely an officer of the court to conserve the estate until the person properly entitled to administer has been determined. The court is under no limitations whatever as to the person or persons whom it will appoint; and while the wishes of the parties in interest are and should be usually regarded, if they concur in a choice, yet the probate court is absolutely free to select whom it pleases for the office of collector. Being free to select, it should be free to displace a collector whenever, in its opinion, the occasion arises for such displacement, unless there is some special provision of law to the contrary. For, unless restricted by law, the power to appoint necessarily implies the power to remove, even without cause; although in matters of judicial cognizance it is not to be assumed that this power will be exercised arbitrarily or without due regard to the rights and interests of all the persons concerned.

In the matter of the removal of an executor there is of course a limitation upon the authority of the court that it can not be done without just cause, for the reason, as already stated, and as is well settled, that the executor does not derive his authority from the court, but from the will of the deceased; and the power to remove must therefore be specifically granted by the statute. Similarly, in the matter of the removal of an administrator once appointed there is a limitation upon the power of the probate court; for the order of administration is regulated by the statute; and unless there is good cause to the contrary, which, however, is in the sound judicial discretion of the probate court itself, that court is bound to appoint the different persons entitled in the order in which they are designated in the statute, and being compelled to appoint in that order, it is not of course at liberty to nullify the law by arbitrary removal after appointment.

But in reference to collectors the case is wholly different. The collector is merely an officer of the court to conserve the estate, and no more substantially as a receiver is in a court of equity. If he fails to perform his duty satisfactorily there is no reason why he should not be removed. If he has become incapable of performing it, as by illness, insanity, removal from the jurisdiction, or some other such cause, it may become imperative that he should be removed. He has no such right or interest in the estate as has the executor or administrator, that would preclude action for his removal by the court which appointed him.

It is very true that by the sections of the Code which have been cited, collectors have so far been assimilated to executors and administrators as that provision is made for their removal in certain specified classes of cases. But it does not follow from this that they may not be removed for other causes also. These provisions of law do not purport to be exclusive, and very plainly they do not include all the cases in which it would be necessary or proper to revoke letters ad colligendum. They do not include cases of disability on the part of the collector to perform his duty, when such disability has supervened after the appointment. They do not include cases of disqualification, which would have precluded the appointment in the first instance if the disqualification had then been known, but of which the knowledge has come to the court or to the parties in interest after the appointment. They do not include many cases of possible misconduct, which would render the continuance of the collector in office dangerous to the security of the estate. To hold that in all such cases the court has so tied its own hands as not to be able to untie them, would be to render the administration of the probate law dangerous in the extreme to all the interests involved in litigation over the estates of deceased persons.

We find no adjudicated case that states a doctrine contrary to this. Those that are cited on behalf of the appellant are cases regarding the removal of administrators; and administrators, as we have stated, stand upon a very different basis from collectors.

Holding, as we do, that the probate court has the discretion, the sound judicial discretion, to remove at will a collector of an estate to whom letters ad colligendum have been issued, we do not deem it either necessary or proper to determine whether in the present instance that discretion has been properly exercised. It has been repeatedly held that, when there is a judicial discretion vested in a court, the exercise of that discretion will not be reviewed in an appellate tribunal, except for the abuse of it; and certainly there would seem to be no abuse of discretion in the attempt to find an impartial collector who has no interest with either party to a pending litigation.

It follows that the order appealed from must be affirmed, with costs.

The cause will be remanded to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia for further proceedings therein according to law. And it is so ordered.

Affirmed.

THE UNITED STATES, EX RELATIONE OF JUAN RODRIGUEZ, APPELLANT, v. JOHN M. BOWYER, COMMANDER U. S. N., ET AL.

CIVIL SERVICE RULES; APPLICATION BY PORTO RICAN FOR REGISTRATION; MANDAMUS.

Under Rule V of the civil service rules, promulgated by the President on April 15, 1903, a native of Porto Rico, owing allegiance to the United States, and possessing the necessary qualifications required by the remaining regulations, is entitled to registration by the board of labor employment at the United States Navy Yard in this city; and mandamus will lie to compel said board to grant his application for such registration.

No. 1504. Decided March 7, 1905.

APPEAL by relator from an order of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at Law, No. 46,916, dismissing a petition for mandamus. Reversed.

Mr. Fredrigo Degetau and Mr. Jean F. P. des Garennes for the appellant.

Mr. Morgan H. Beach, Mr. Jesse C. Adkins, Mr. Wm. J. Hughes, and Mr. Wm. R. Harr for the appellees.

Mr. Chief Justice SHEPARD delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is an appeal from an order dismissing a petition for a writ of mandamus filed on behalf of the relator, Juan Rodriguez, against John M. Bowyer and others, constituting the Board of Labor Employment at the United States Navy Yard in the city of Washington.

It appears from the petition and return and an agreed statement of facts that petitioner was born in Porto Rico on December 6, 1884; that he remained therein until after the ratification of the treaty of Paris and the passage of the "Foraker Act," and became and is a "citizen of Porto Rico." He came to the District of Columbia, and on February 16, 1904, made application to the Board of Labor Employment for admission to examination and registration under the regulation providing that no person shall be given employment as a mechanic or laborer until he registers. Among other qualifications required by the regulation is one that the applicant shall be a citizen of the United States. It is unnecessary to state the other qualifications relating to capacity and so forth, for it is admitted that the board found that they were possessed by the petitioner, and denied registration on the sole ground that the petitioner, though a citizen of Porto Rico and owing allegiance as such to the United States, was not, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, a citizen of the latter.

The Board of Labor Employment are ministerial officers and their duty in the premises did not cease to be ministerial because they rested their refusal of registration on the determination of a pure question of law, involving the ascertainment of no fact whatever. Roberts v. U. S. ex. rel. Valentine, 13 App. D. C. 38, 46: 26 Wash. Law Rep. 375; s. c., 176 U. S. 221, 231.

We do not find it necessary to enter upon the inquiry whether the petitioner, at the time of making his application for registration, was a citizen of the United States and entitled to all of the civil rights and immunities pertaining to such citizenship, because we are of the opinion that the regulation of the Navy Department, made in 1896, has been modified by regulations and rules of the civil service of the United States since made by order of the President. The original navy yard rules and regulations were adaptations of the principles of the civil service, though not then subject to the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission. 20th Rep. C. S. Com., pp. 100, 101. They were, however, brought under the supervision of the commission by order of President Cleveland on November 2, 1896. 13th Rep. C. S. Com., p. 151.

No modification of the rule requiring an applicant for registration to be a citizen of the United States was suggested by any conditions existing prior to the treaty of Paris. New conditions arising thereafter were met by additional civil service rules promulgated by President Roosevelt on April 15, 1903. Of these, Rule V provides that "No person shall be admitted to examination unless he be a citizen of or owe allegiance to the United States." And thereunder it is provided that "An applicant who claims United States citizenship by virtue of residence in Porto Rico, and who shows birth or naturalization in Porto Rico, will not be required to show further evidence of citizenship." 20th Rep. C. S. Com., p. 48.

Since that time, as shown in the same report (p. 16), seventy-eight residents of Porto Rico have received appointments in the general service of the United States, eleven of these being in the service in the city of Washington.

The board of labor employment having admitted that the petitioner was a native of Porto Rico, owing allegiance to the United States, and that he possessed all of the qualifications required by the remaining regulations, it is their plain duty to admit him to registration in accordance with his application.

That the petitioner may, possibly, not receive any substantial benefit from his registration is not a sufficient reason for denying him the remedy sought. The conditions of the case distinguish it from those of Brown v. Root, 18 App. D. C. 239: 29 Wash. Law Rep. 477; Edwards v. Root, 22 App. D. C. 419: 31 Wash. Law Rep. 679, upon which the respondents rely.

The order dismissing the petition will be reversed, with costs, and the cause remanded with directions to issue the writ as prayed. It is so ordered.

Reversed.

ROBERT JACKSON, APPELLANT,
v.
GEORGE E. EMMONS ET AL.

TRESPASS; STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

In an action of trespass, where it appeared there had been three separate and distinct trespasses, two of which were barred by the statute of limitations, held that the recovery was properly confined to the damage sustained by reason of the third trespass; and evidence as to personal injuries sustained by plaintiff's wife from one of the other trespasses properly excluded.

No. 1455. Decided March 7, 1905.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at Law, No. 38,509, entered upon the verdict of a jury in an action of trespass. Affirmed.

Mr. J. J. Waters for the appellant.

Mr. Wm. F. Mattingly for the appellees.

Mr. Justice MORRIS delivered the opinion of the Court:

This cause is a suit at common law for damages resulting from a trespass to property, and it is now here for the third time. On the last appeal to this court, which is found reported in 19 D. C. App. 259: 30 Wash. Law Rep. 72, the facts of the case were stated and need not be here repeated, further than to say that the appellees were engaged in some blasting operations in the neighborhood of Rock Creek, in this city, and in proximity to a little house occupied by the appellant and his family; that these operations, which appear to have been at first conducted without any permission from the municipal authorities, which, however, was afterwards obtained, were carried on somewhat recklessly, and constituted a serious menace to the appellant and his family; that on three several occasions his house was injured by the stones; and thaton one of these occasions his wife was struck by a piece of rock and somewhat injured.

The appellant instituted suit in the Supreme Court of the District; and besides the defense of the general issue, that of the statute of limitations was interposed. There was also a defense to the effect that the plaintiff did not own the house, and was only a tenant at sufferance or at will. It was held that he could not recover. On appeal to this court we held that his ownership of the property was such as to entitle him to recover; but that, as two of the three special acts of trespass set out in the declaration were barred by the statute of limitations, he could only recover, if at all, upon the third act of trespass; and we remanded the cause for a new trial upon the issues so defined. That new trial has now been had, and the plaintiff has had verdict and judgment rendered in his favor for the whole amount of the damage claimed by him in the declaration to have been done by the third act of trespass. This verdict and judgment the appellees do not seem to have resisted. But the plaintiff nevertheless appeals again to this court, on the ground that the action of the appellees was a continuing trespass, and especially on the ground that he should have been allowed to recover for the injury to his wife, which on the previous trial had been shown to have been the result of one of the trespasses barred by the statute of limitations. The verdict and judgment rendered restricted him to the damage done by the third trespass, which he himself, both in his declaration and his proof, specifically stated to have been only $64.21.

The ruling of the trial court was entirely right, and was in full accordance with the opinion of this court on the former appeal. So far as the appellant was concerned, it is very plain that there was no continuing nuisance, but three several, separate, and distinct assaults upon his property, for two of which he was barred from recovery by the statute of limitations, and for the third of which he recovered all he claimed in his declaration. This should be the end of his case.

His main effort during the last trial was to introduce testimony as to the injury of his wife, which he concedes to have been the result of the trespass of July 21, which was barred by the statute of limitations. The trial court very properly refused to allow the introduction of any such testimony, and we do not deem it necessary to discuss the matter further.

The judgment will be affirmed with costs, and it is so ordered.

BENJAMIN W. GUY, APPELLANT,
v.
THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

TAXATION; CERTIORARI TO REVIEW ASSESSMENT.

1. The writ of certiorari is a proper remedy in proper cases for relief against illegal assessments; but to entitle a party applying to the favorable exercise of the court's discretion it must be shown as a ground for the writ that wrong and injustice will be suffered if it be not granted; and the application must be made without unreasonable delay; following Padgett v. District of Columbia, 28 Wash. Law Rep. 868.
2. The quashing of the writ held proper where not only was there no showing that wrong and injustice would be suffered if the writ were not granted, and also a delay of sixteen years in applying therefor, but the petition on its face showed that there was danger of wrong and injustice being done if the writ were granted.

No. 1505. Decided March 7, 1905.

APPEAL by petitioner from an order of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at Law, No. 47,085, quashing a writ of certiorari to review a tax assessment. Affirmed.

This is a proceeding in certiorari in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to bring up the record of certain assessments and a tax sale thereunder, and for a cancellation of the tax sale.

The appellant, on July 19, 1904, filed his petition in the Supreme Court of the District, in which he alleged, in substance, that he was the owner in fee simple of lot No. 23, in square No. 869, in this city; that there was borne on the tax records of the District the entry or record of a sale made of the said lot on February 23, 1888, for the sum of $1,734.95 to one John G. Slater, which said sum of $1,734.95 was made up of four several special items, as follows: (1) A certificate, No. 1637, for a special assessment in the name of one Emanuel Mason, amounting with interest to $926.56; (2) a lien certificate, No. 12,116, for special assessment in the same name, amounting with interest to $365.61; (3) general taxes for the years from 1878 to 1884, both inclusive, assessed in the name of William Deacon, amounting to $389.59, and (4) general taxes for the years 1885 and 1886, assessed in the name of L. M. Saunders, amounting to $53.25; that no deed had ever been executed in pursuance of such tax sale, but that a certificate of said sale had been issued to said Slater, which was outstanding and uncancelled, and constituted a cloud upon the petitioner's title. And the petition proceeded further to allege that the assessments had been made in violation of law, and without notice to the owner of the lot, and were null and void. The prayer of the petition was for the writ of certiorari to bring up the record of the proceedings of the municipal authorities in the premises, and for the annulment of the tax sale above mentioned.

There was an order for the writ to issue, and then there was a motion made on behalf of the District to quash it, which motion was supported or supplemented by an affidavit of one of the Commissioners for the District. In this affidavit a history of the transaction was given from the records of the District, whereby it appeared, among other things, that after the issue of the certificate of sale, as mentioned in the petition, to John G. Slater, he and one Christiana became the owners of the property, and that, on June 28, 1904, the petitioner, Guy, had become the owner of the property under divers mesne conveyances from Slater and Christiani.

The motion to quash the writ was allowed, and the writ was accordingly quashed, and the petition was dismissed. From the order to that effect the petitioner has now appealed to this court.

The proceedings in this case seem to have been based upon those had in the case of Padgett v. The District of Columbia, 17 D. C. App. 255, 28 Wash. Law Rep. 868, where a course similar to that here pursued was sanctioned. While we have no disposition to modify in any manner the force of the decision therein rendered, or the course of reasoning by which that decision was reached, we desire it to be distinctly understood that the mode of procedure in that case was exceptional in its nature, and not intended to be applicable to all cases where it is sought by writ of certiorari to correct an illegal assessment. In that case it was said by the chief justice, speaking for this court:

"Of course we do not intend to be understood as holding that the writ (of certiorari) is not a proper remedy in proper cases for relief against illegal assessments; but to entitle the party applying to the favorable exercise of the court's discretion, it must be shown as a ground for the writ that wrong and injustice will be suffered if the writ be not granted. And the application, moreover, must be made without any unreasonable delay."

The present case, however, does fall under the principle and the ruling of the Padgett case. It is not made to appear here that wrong and injustice will be suffered if the writ is not granted. Nor does it appear that the application has been made without unreasonable delay. On the contrary, it does appear affirmatively from the petition itself that there is a delay of upwards of sixteen years; that is, from February 23, 1888, the date of the alleged illegal tax sale, to the date of the filing of the petition, July 10, 1904,—a period longer than that of any act of limitations now in force in this District. And, instead of showing that wrong and injustice will be done unless the writ is granted, the petition on its face shows that there is grave danger that wrong and injustice will be done if the writ is granted. For the petition shows that a certificate of sale has been issued to one John G. Slater, upon which prima facie he is entitled to have a conveyance made to him, and yet the proposition of the petition is, as is the purpose of the whole proceeding, that this certificate of sale should be declared void and should be cancelled without giving Slater, the person most vitally interested in it, an opportunity to be heard in defense of his rights. Instead of being in the interest of justice, this would be most flagrant injustice.

It is to be presumed, of course, that the District of Columbia has received its money in the premises upon or before the issue of the certificate of sale; and, if it has received its money, which certainly can not be recovered back under a proceeding of this kind, if at all, it is not apparent that it has any interest whatever in the proceedings, further than as they would set a precedent for interference with their fiscal operations. The only person interested in opposition to the petitioner, in accordance with the petitioner's own showing, is Slater, and Slater is not, and can not be made, a party to the proceeding. This, of itself, is sufficient to show that the writ of certiorari should not be issued in a case of this kind.

It is very true that, if we take into consideration the affidavit filed by the respondent or on behalf of it, a very different case is presented. There we find that Slater was not only the owner of the certificate of sale, but that he subsequently purchased the property in order to complete the title in himself, and that the present petitioner merely succeeded to his rights. It would be a glaring absurdity if Slater had filed this petition; and the situation is not relieved of its absurdity to any extent by the fact that not he, but his vendee, has filed it. The petitioner, by becoming a recent purchaser of the property in 1904, did not relieve himself from the effect of the period of long delay that had been suffered to elapse since the issue of the certificate, nor from the effect of the merger of the certificate into the fee simple title when both became possessed by the same person.

It is not apparent that any good purpose can be subserved by the writ of certiorari in this case; but it is apparent that much mischief may be done by it. If the petitioner has any rights in the premises as against the District of Columbia he is not without remedy; but he has not shown himself to be entitled to the writ of certiorari.

The order appealed from will be, and it is hereby, affirmed with costs. And it is so ordered.

Affirmed.

WILLIAM H. McCAFFREY, EDWARD QUIGLEY, ET AL., APPELLANTS,

v.

LIZZIE C. MANOGUE, GEORGE W. MANOGUE, AND FRANK FOLEY.

WILLS, CONSTRUCTION OF; DEVISE IN GENERAL TERMS; INTENTION OF TESTATOR.

1. In construing a will, the policy of the law in favor of the heir yields to the intention of the testator if clearly expressed or manifested.
2. The provisions of a will construed and held to give the devisees an estate in fee simple, and not merely a life estate.
3. In the construction of wills the courts are not required to adhere rigidly to precedents.

Decided February 20, 1905.

APPEAL from the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia. Reversed.

The question involved in this case is the construction of the will of Hugh McCaffrey, deceased. It was duly admitted to probate and recorded in the Supreme Court of the District. It is as follows:

"WASHINGTON, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
April Thirtieth, 1896.

"In the name of God, being now in good health and sound in mind and body I hereby certify and declare this to be my last will and testament, hereby annulling and revoking any and all wills previously made.

"I give and bequeath to my daughter Mary A. Quigley house number 301 at southwest corner of 11th and C streets southeast, being in lot number 5, in square 970, with the store and dwelling, stock and fixtures, and lot on which it stands, also houses numbers 13 and 15 6th street southeast with lots on which they stand, being parts of lots 19 and 20 in square 841, also any money in bank to my account at the time of my death, also any money due to me, also any building association stock. She is to pay funeral expencies and any other legal debts I may owe, also to care for my lot in Mount Olivet cemetrey.

"I give and bequeath to my son, James B. McCaffrey, house number six hundred and two (602) East Capitol street and lot on which it stands, being in lot number ten (10) in square number eight hundred and sixty-eight (868).

"To my son, William H. McCaffrey, I give and bequeath house 604 East Capitol street, being in lot number ten (10), in square number eight hundred and sixty-eight (868) and lot on which it stands.

"To my daughter, Lizzie Manogue, I give and bequeath house number fourteen hundred and twenty-three (1423) Corcoran street, N. W., and lot on which it stands, being lot number fifty-four (54) in square number two hundred and eight (208).

"2. To my son, Francis T. McCaffrey, I give and bequeath house five hundred and nineteen (519) East Capitol street, and lot on which it stands, being part of lot number (20) in square eight hundred and forty-one (841), also my horse and buggy.

"And to my grandson, Frank Foley, I give and bequeath house number one hundred and twenty-one (121) Eleventh street, S. E., being in lot number fourteen (14), square number nine hundred and sixty-eight (968), and lot on which it stands.

"To my grandson Joseph Quigley, I give and bequeath my watch and chain.

"I hereby name and appoint as executors of this my last will and testament, John E. Herrell and Patrick Maloney.

"All the real estate herein described is located in the city of Washington, District of Columbia.

"HUGH McCAFFREY. [SEAL.]"

The devisees in the will were the only heirs of the testator.

On the 10th of July, 1897, Mary A. Quigley died, leaving surviving four children, the appellants Catherine L., Margaret, Mary, and Joseph Quigley. Edward Quigley, her husband, also an appellant, survived her. She left a will, which was duly admitted to record, by which she devised all her estate to Catherine L. and Edward Quigley in trust for her children. Francis T. McCaffrey, son of Hugh, and one of the devisees in the latter's will, died October 20, 1898, leaving as heirs at law his brothers and sisters, the children of his deceased sister, Mary A. Quigley, and his nephew, Frank Foley. He left a will, by which he devised and bequeathed all of the property to his sister, Lizzie C. Manogue, and his brothers William A. and James B. McCaffrey, "absolutely and in fee simple, according to the nature of the property, as tenants in common, but not as joint tenants." At the time of his death he was seized and possessed of the real estate devised to him by his father.

James B. McCaffrey has sold and conveyed the lot devised to him to the respondent George W. Manogue. Upon an attempt to sell the property devised by Francis T. McCaffrey a doubt was raised as to the extent of the interest devised to him and the other devisees by the will of H. McCaffrey, whether an estate for life or in fee simple. This suit was brought "to have it determined what estate each of the said devisees took thereby, and to have their title quieted as against any person or persons who may claim adversely to the same as heirs of said Hugh McCaffrey, or under such heirs."

It was decreed by the trial court that only life estates were devised by the will, and the decree was affirmed by the Court of Appeals. 22 App. Cases D. C. 385: 31 Wash. Law Rep. 454.

Mr. Justice McKENNA, after stating the case, delivered the opinion of the court:

It will be observed that the devises are expressed in exactly the same way. To Mary A. Quigley, however, there are given several pieces of real estate, the money of the testator in bank and his building association stock. She is charged with the payment of the testator's funeral expenses and debts; also with the care of his cemetery lot. Nevertheless, neither of the lower courts distinguished between the devisees—to all was applied the rule of law that a devise of land without words of limitation or description gives a life estate only. The Court of Appeals held that the charge or burden upon Mary A. Quigley to pay the funeral expenses and debts of the testator was offset by the gift to her of personal property. It is insisted that the ruling is contrary to the decision in King v. Ackerman, 2 Black, 408. It is there said: "The rule of law which gives a fee where the devisee is charged with a sum of money is a technical dominant rule, and intended to defeat the effect" of the artificial rule established in favor of the heir at law, that an indefinite devise of land passes nothing but a life estate. It was, however, apparent to the Court of Appeals that, to follow King v. Ackerman, would not execute the intention of the testator by opposing one technical rule by another, but would discriminate between his heirs and destroy the equality between them which it was the purpose of the will to create. To effect this equality the court selected, not the "dominant rule," whose virtue this court pointed out, but the other, regarding it the most commanding. It is altogether a strange tangle of technicalities. Apply either of them, or both of them, and we defeat the intention of the testator. Are we reduced to this dilemma? We think not; nor need we dispute the full strength of the rule in favor of the heir at law. It is not an unyielding declaration of law. It can not be applied when the intention of the testator is made plain. It can not be applied when the purpose of the testator, as seen in the will, can not be carried out by a devise of a less estate than the fee. Bell County v. Alexander, 22 Texas, 350. The policy of the law in favor of their yields, we repeat, to the intention of a testator is clearly expressed or manifested. That policy, the reason for it and the elements of it, is expressed strongly by Mr. Justice Story in Wright v. Denn, 10 Wheat. 204, 227, 228:

"Where there are no words of limitation to a devise, the general rule of law is, that the devisee takes an estate for life only, unless, from the language there used or from other parts of the will, there is a plain intention, because if it be doubtful or conjectural upon the terms of the will, or if full legal effect can be given to the language without such an estate, the general rule prevails. It is not sufficient that the court may entertain a private belief that the testator intended a fee; it must see that he has expressed that intention with reasonable certainty on the face of his will. For the law will not suffer the heir to be disinherited upon conjecture. He is favored by its policy; and though the testator may disinherit him, yet the law will execute that intention only when it is put in a clear and unambiguous shape." (Italics ours.)

We think the intention of McCaffrey is "put in a clear and unambiguous shape." He intended to dispose of his whole estate. It is true there is no introductory clause expressing such intention, but there is no residuary clause indicating that he intended to pass less than all of his estate. And all of his heirs at law were his devisees. In other words, the very heirs for whom the rule is invoked are those among whom he distributed his property, and surely he intended a complete distribution—to vest in each the largest interest he could give, not assigning life estates with residuary fees to the very persons to whom such life estates were devised. In other words, making each heir the successor of the other and of himself. It was evident to the Court of Appeals—it is evident to us—that he intended to make his heirs equal. Of this purpose the charge upon his daughter, Mary A. Quigley, is dominantly significant, not only in effect, but in its expression. She is given a greater quantity of real estate than the other devisees. She is given personal property besides, but, declared the testator, "she is to pay funeral expenses and other legal debts I may owe, also to care for my lot in Mount Olivet Cemetery." That charge was not intended to enlarge the quantity of interest in the real estate devised in the sense contended for, but to make an equality between her and the other heirs and devisees, and, we repeat, that was his especial purpose. In other words, he gave her more property, not a larger interest in it. The devise to his grandson, Frank Foley, shows how carefully the testator regarded his heirs. Surely, as he regarded that grandchild as inheriting the rights which his mother might have inherited, he did not intend a disposition of his property which precluded his other grandchildren of inheriting through their parents. And this will be the result if the appellees are right. No devisee possesses an estate which can be devised to or inherited by his or her children.

Against the effect of the heirs at law of the testator being also his devisees, it may be said that it has been held that, though a testator has given a nominal legacy to his heir or declared an intention to wholly disinherit him, the inflexibility of the rule in favor of the heir has been enforced. Frogmorton v. Right, 2 W. B. 1045; Right v. Sidebotham, Douglas, 759; Roe d. Peter v. Daw, 3 M. & Sel. 518.

In Right v. Sidebotham, Lord Mansfield felt himself constrained to enforce the rule, but he observed in protest: "I verily believe that, in almost every case whereby in law a general devise of land is reduced to an estate for life, the intent of the testator is thwarted; for ordinary people do not distinguish between real and personal property. The rule of law, however, is established and certain, that expressed in words of limitations, the words tantamount are necessary to pass an estate of inheritance." And he hence concluded that words tending to disinherit the heir at law, unless the estate is given to someone else, was not sufficient to prevent the heir from taking.

Lord Ellenborough in Roe d. Peter v. Daw followed the rule, and declared also that he thereby probably defeated the intention of the testator. It is a strange conclusion from the facts and needs the sanction of those great names to rescue it from even stronger characterization. Lord Mansfield spoke in 1781, Lord Ellenborough in 1815. We can not believe, if called upon to interpret a will made in 1896, when the rights of heirs are not so insistent and the rule in their favor lingers, where it lingers at all, almost an anachronism; when ownership of real property is usually in fee, and when men's thoughts and speech and dealings are with the fee, they would hold that the purpose of a testator to disinherit his heirs could be translated into a remainder in fee after a devise of a life estate to another.

But, perhaps, even the severe technicality of those cases need not be questioned. In the construction of wills we are not required to adhere rigidly to precedents. We said in Abbott et ux. v. Essex Co., 18 How. 202, 213:

"If wills were always drawn by counsel learned in the law, it would be highly proper that courts should rigidly adhere to precedents, because every such instrument might justly be presumed to have been drawn with reference to them. But in a country where, from necessity or choice, every man acts as his own scrivener, his will is subject to be perverted by the application of rules of construction of which he was wholly ignorant."

To like effect is Cook et al v. Holmes et ux., 11 Mass. 527, where the will passed on contained the following devise: "Item. To his grandson Gregory C., only child of his son Daniel C., deceased, a certain piece of land in Watertown, containing about 6 acres." The will contained devises to other sons of pieces of real estate, charging them with payment of certain legacies. The will concluded as follows: "The above-described legacies, together with what I have heretofore done for my children and grandchildren, make them nearly equal, and are their full portions of my estate."

The will, therefore, is similar to the will in the case at bar. Equality between the devisees is as much the purpose of one as the other, though it is expressed in one and deduced as an implication in the other. Chief Justice Parker, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The quality of the estate which Gregory C. took by the devise must be determined by the words of the will, taken together, and receiving a liberal construction, to effectuate the intention of the testator as manifested in the will."

Further: "The words of the particular devises to Gregory, considered by themselves, certainly give no inheritance." And stating the rule of law to be, as contrasted with the popular understanding, "that such a devise, standing alone, without any aid in the construction from other parts of the will would amount only to an estate for life in the devisee," added:

"But it is too well established and known to require argument or authorities now to support the position that devises and legacies in a will may receive a character, by construction and comparison with other legacies and devises in the same will, different from the literal and direct effect of the words made use of in such devise (cases were cited in note); and this because the sole duty of the court in giving a construction is to ascertain the real intent and meaning of the testator, which can be better gathered by adverting to the whole scope of the provisions made by him for the objects of his bounty than by confining their attention to one isolated paragraph, probably drawn up without a knowledge of technical words or without recollecting the advantage of using them."

The devise to Gregory C. was held to be of the fee.

From these views it follows that the decree of the Court of Appeals must be and it is reversed, and the case is remanded to that court with directions to reverse the decree of the Supreme Court, and remand the case to that court with directions to enter a decree in accordance with this opinion.

Mr. Justice Peckham dissents.

The moral obligation of a son to support his mother is held, in Freeman v. Dodge (Me.), 66 L. R. A. 395, not to be a sufficient consideration to support a promise to reimburse the town for expenses incurred for that purpose.

An agreement made by husband and wife in contemplation of separation, through the intervention of a trustee, as to the wife's support, is held, in Bailey v. Dillon (Mass.), 66 L. R. A. 427, to be a valid one, which, during the continuance of the separation, the husband may have specifically enforced if it is fair and reasonable and free from fraud and concealment.

The right of a person to shoot an officer who merely announces an intention to arrest him is denied in Keady v. People (Colo.), 66 L. R. A. 353, although the character of the officer does not appear, and the arrest would be unwarranted. An elaborate note to this case reviews all the other authorities on homicide in resisting arrest, or of officers of justice.

The right of an employee to recover damages of a railroad company for an injury proximately caused by his violation of a penal statute or municipal ordinance is denied in Little v. Southern R. Co. (Ga.), 66 L. R. A. 509, even though the employer may have directed the employee to violate the law, or may have sanctioned the continuance of a custom amounting to a contravention of the law.

The inadvertent omission of a copyright notice from the publication of a copyrighted article by a licensee of the owner of the copyright is held, in American Press Ass. v. Daily Story Pub. Co., C. C. A. 7th C., 66 L. R. A. 444, not to withdraw the protection of the copyright, or absolve another, who publishes the matter without authority, from liability in damages, although he was ignorant of the existence of the copyright. The question of the effect of omitting notice of copyright from licensed publication is considered in a note to this case.

A bank which receives in the ordinary course of business a check drawn upon it, presented by a bona fide holder, who is without notice of the fact that payment thereof has been stopped, and which pays the amount thereof to such holder, is held, in National Bank of New Jersey v. Berrall, N. J. Err. & App., 66 L. R. A. 599, not to be able afterwards to recover back the money as paid by mistake, on the ground that payment of the check had been countermanded by the drawer.

THE Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Duell, has affirmed the decree of the court below in the case of Nagonab v. Hitchcock, Secretary of the Interior. The object of the suit was to enjoin the Secretary of the Interior from carrying out certain provisions of the act of Congress of June 27, 1902, on the ground that the act was in violation of the trust contained in the act of January 14, 1889, under which certain lands were conveyed to the United States by the Chippewa Indians. The lower court held that the facts stated in the bill were not sufficient to entitle the complainant to relief, and dismissed the bill; and this ruling is affirmed by the Court of Appeals.

Continued use of a right of way which originated in necessity after the necessity has ceased is held, in Ann Arbor Fruit & V. Co. v. Ann Arbor R. Co. (Mich.), 66 L. R. A. 431, not to become adverse until notice of the adverse claim is brought home to the owner of the servient estate.

An act done by a servant while engaged in the work of his master, but entirely disconnected therefrom, and solely for the accomplishment of the malicious or mischievous purpose of the servant, is held, in Evers v. Krouse, N. J. Err. & App., 66 L. R. A. 592, not to render the master liable for injuries to a third person resulting from such act.

The liability of a non-resident debtor to a non-resident corporation is held, in National Broadway Bank v. Sampson (N. Y.), 66 L. R. A. 606, not to be subject to attachment within the State when the debtor is temporarily within its jurisdiction, since the situs of the debt is at the place of residence either of the debtor or of the creditor.

The liability of a landlord for injury to a tenant because of defects in the construction of the building on the leased premises, of which he had no knowledge, and which were so hidden that there was no way of discovering them without undoing a portion of the construction work, is denied in Whitley v. McLaughlin (Mo.), 66 L. R. A. 484.

Extra services rendered to a person after she became insane are held, in Waldron v. Davis, N. J. Err. & App., 66 L. R. A. 591, not to be presumed to have been intended as a gratuity, where, before becoming insane, she lived with the person performing the services under a contract that the latter was to board and care for her for a fixed price, and, until insanity supervened, payments for such board and care were regularly made.

The injury inflicted upon a street-car passenger through mental suffering, humiliation, wounded pride, and disgrace because of the act of the conductor in calling her a deadbeat when she asked for the proper change for money she had tendered in payment of fare, is held in Gillespie v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. (N. Y.), 66 L. R. A. 618, to be properly considered in assessing damages for breach of the carrier's contract to return the proper change for money tendered.

The intentional kicking, without just cause or excuse, by a street car conductor, of a boy who was attempting to board the car to become a passenger, is held, in McNamara v. St. Louis Transit Co. (Mo.), 66 L. R. A. 486, to justify an award of exemplary damages against the street car company, although the conductor honestly believed that the boy was attempting to steal a ride.

A distribution of prizes to those who shall make the closest estimate of the number of cigars on which a tax is paid during a specified month is held, in People ex rel. Ellison v. Lavin (N. Y.), 66 L. R. A. 601, to be made by chance, within the meaning of a statute defining a lottery as a scheme for the distribution of property by chance to persons who have paid or agreed to pay a valuable consideration for the chance.

Sureties on an executor's bond are held, in United Brethren First Church v. Akin (Or.), 66 L. R. A. 654, to be liable to creditors of the estate for their distributive shares of an indebtedness owing from him to the estate at the time of his qualification as executor, for which the statutes make him liable on his final settlement as for so much money in his hands, although he was at the time of his qualification insolvent, and the sureties executed the bond without knowledge of his indebtedness or insolvency.

An answer denying merely that the payee of a note suing thereon is the owner and holder thereof, and alleging that he is not the real party in interest, is held, in Berry v. Barton (Okla.), 66 L. R. A. 513, to state no defense to a petition which recites the execution of the note to the payee for a valuable consideration, and that the maker has defaulted, and the payee is held to be entitled to judgment on the pleadings. All the other authorities on sufficiency of answers denying ownership of plaintiff in actions on negotiable instruments are collated in an extensive note to this case.

A landlord is held, in Davis v. Smith (R. I.), 66 L. R. A. 478, not to be liable for the damages resulting to the tenant or a member of his family through sickness caused by breach of his covenant to repair, either in tort or upon the contract.

The right to an injunction to restrain one of the former members of a partnership, each of whom, on a sale of the business and its good will, bound himself in the act of sale not to engage in a competitive business within a certain city for a certain period of time, from continuing in a rival business into which he had entered in violation of his contract, is sustained in Eugene Dietzgen Co. v. Kokosky (La.), 66 L. R. A. 508, and he is denied the right to set up in justification of his act that the purchasers had orally agreed, as a consideration for his promise not to engage in a rival business, to employ him for a period longer than that during which he had bound himself not to enter into a competitive business, and had wrongfully discharged him before the termination of such period.

The object of this suit is to declare the title of complainants to lots fifteen (15), twenty-two (22), and twenty-three (23), in James H. Meriwether's subdivision of lots in square numbered three hundred and four (304), in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, as said subdivision is recorded in liber twenty (20), folio one (1), of the records in the office of the surveyor of said District, to be good in fee simple in the complainants by adverse possession. Upon motion of the complainants, by their solicitor, it is this eighth day of March, A. D. 1905, ordered that the defendants, the unknown heirs, alienees, and devisees of said William H. Parker, deceased, cause their appearance to be made herein on the first rule day occurring after the expiration of forty (40) days, exclusive of Sundays and legal holidays, after the date of the first publication of this order; otherwise this cause will be proceeded with as in case of default. It is further ordered that this order shall be published in The Washington Law Reporter four (4) times during the current month of March and in each issue of said Reporter during the month of April, 1905, the court being satisfied upon good cause shown by the bill and affidavit, filed in this cause, that it is not necessary that this order shall be published at least twice a month during the period of not less than three (3) months, or that the same shall be published in any other paper, no other paper being selected by the parties. By the Court: THOS. H. ANDERSON, Justice. A true copy. Test: J. R. Young, Clerk, by F. E. Cunningham, Asst. Clerk. 10-3t

DECISIONS BY THE COURT OF APPEALS DURING THE PRESENT WEEK.

Validity of Act Providing for New Union Station.

In the case of Millard v. Roberts et al., the proceeding was brought by Millard against the Treasurer of the United States, the Commissioners of the District, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, the Philadelphia, B. and W. Railroad Company, and the Washington Terminal Company, to prevent payment to the two railroad companies of the sum of $1,500,000 each, as directed by the act of Congress providing for the new union station, and that providing for the elimination of grade crossings. The constitutionality of this legislation was attacked on two grounds, viz: That the acts in question were revenue measures, and should have originated in the House of Representatives, and not in the Senate, where they did originate; and that the legislation amounted to an appropriation of public money for private purposes. In regard to the first proposition the court holds that while general appropriation bills and revenue legislation must originate in the House of Representatives, this rule does not apply to legislation for another purpose, although an appropriation may be incidental to such purpose and necessary to give it efficiency.

As to the second contention, the court holds that the matter amounted to a contract between the United States and the District on the one hand and the railroad companies on the other, by which the latter surrendered certain rights and undertook the construction of improvements more extensive, perhaps, than was required for the purposes of the railroad companies; and even if the compensation was apparently excessive, that was a matter for the determination of Congress and not the courts. The decree of the court below dismissing the bill, upon demurrer thereto, is affirmed, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Morris.

Building and Loan Association; Settlement With Borrowing Stockholder.

In the case of Whelpley et al. v. Ross, the controversy was between a building and loan association and a borrowing shareholder respecting a settlement by the latter of a loan. The court below decreed a release of the deed of trust securing the loan, and also the payment to the appellee of an alleged overpayment on account thereof. The decree is modified by the Court of Appeals so as to relieve the association from this payment, and, as so modified, affirmed. Because of the meagre record in the case, the court declines to pass upon the question of whether the transaction was usurious, though intimating an opinion to the contrary. The opinion was delivered by Mr. Justice Morris.

Defective Sidewalks; Contributory Negligence; Judgment for Defendant Reversed.

In the case of Dotey v. District of Columbia, the plaintiff sued to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by reason of the defective condition of a sidewalk. The trial court held the plaintiff not entitled to recover, the accident having happened outside the line of the public sidewalk and within what is designated as the parking, and directed a verdict for defendant. The Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Morris, reverses the judgment, holding that the case was one proper to be submitted to the jury.

Deed; Delivery.

In the case of Bunten v. American Security and Trust Company, the appeal was from a judgment in an action of ejectment tried by the court without a jury. The controversy was between the devisee under a last will and testament, as plaintiff, and the grantee in a deed in trust made by the testatrix in her lifetime; and the case turned upon the question whether there had been a delivery by the grantor, in her lifetime, of the deed in trust, so as to be effective and leave nothing for her to devise to plaintiff. The trial court held there had been such a delivery, and rendered judgment for defendant, which is affirmed in an opinion by Mr. Justice Duell.

Decision in Knights of Labor Controversy Reversed.

In the case of Hayes et al. v. Burns et al. the controversy was between rival factions of the Knights of Labor, each claiming to be the legally constituted order and officers thereof. The proceeding was in equity, and was brought by Burns and others against Hayes and his associates, seeking to have complainants decreed to be the duly elected officers of the order and entitled to its property; to enjoin the defendants from removing the property from this District or from in any way interfering with it, and to compel them to turn such property over to complainants, etc. The defendants denied the allegations of the bill, and also that a court of equity had jurisdiction of the controversy.

Each of the rival factions claimed to have been elected officers of the order at the general assembly held in 1902, and defendants were in possession of the offices and property at the time of suit brought. The lower court decreed in favor of the complainants. The Court of Appeals, however, holds that the sole question at issue was which set of men were the legally elected officers of the order, the other relief sought being merely incidental thereto, and that this question was one a court of equity was without jurisdiction to decide. The proper remedy to determine the question of title to offices in a private corporation, such as the Knights of Labor, is by a quo warranto, provision being made in the District Code therefor. It not being competent for the equity court to determine this question, the Court of Appeals holds that the bill should have been dismissed. The decree is therefore reversed, with directions to dismiss the bill, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Duell.

Snow Regulation Held Invalid.

In the case of Coughlin v. District of Columbia the question was as to the validity of the regulation promulgated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia providing for the removal of snow and ice from sidewalks. The Court of Appeals holds the regulation, which was copied from an old municipal ordinance of the city of Washington, invalid, denying the claim made by the Commissioners that they had power to resurrect and reenact it under the act of Congress of January 26, 1887, and the joint resolution of February 26, 1892. It is held that Congress alone, as the law now stands, has power to regulate the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks, etc., and that the duty now rests upon the municipality to provide for such removal. The opinion was delivered by Mr. Justice Morris.

Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

THE PEOPLES NATIONAL BANK OF CHARLOTTESVILLE ET AL., APPELLANTS,

v.

JAMES H. SAVILLE ET AL.

INSOLVENT CORPORATION; UNPAID SUBSCRIPTIONS TO CAPITAL STOCK; EQUITY; SUIT BY CREDITORS; MULTIFARIOUSNESS.

1. The liability of a subscriber for the capital stock of a corporation is several and not joint, and creditors of an insolvent corporation can not in a single suit enforce against a number of the subscribers to its capital stock a liability for the unpaid portion of their subscriptions.
2. There is, in such a case, no such common interest as the law recognizes as a good ground for the prevention of multiplicity of suits.

No. 1428. Decided March 7, 1905.

APPEAL by complainants from a decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in Equity, No. 22,154, dismissing a bill filed by creditors of an insolvent corporation to enforce against numerous defendants alleged unpaid subscriptions to the capital stock of the corporation. Affirmed.

Mr. W. J. Lambert and Mr. D. W. Baker for the appellants.

Mr. Fulton Lewis and Mr. John Ridout for the appellees.

Mr. Justice MORRIS delivered the opinion of the Court:

On June 18, 1891, there was organized, under the laws of the State of Virginia, a corporation designated as the Washington and Roanoke Land and Improvement Company, for the purpose of dealing in land in the city of Roanoke, in the State of Virginia, the principal office of which was to be in the District of Columbia, and of which the officers and a large number of the incorporators were residents of this District, although the certificate of incorporation declared that the principal office of the company should be located and its chief business transacted in the city of Roanoke. The capital stock of the company was to be not less than $175,000, nor more than $300,000, of the par value of $100 a share, to be paid as the board of directors might prescribe. How many shares of stock were taken does not appear; but it does appear that of the amount subscribed for there was payment made for one-half.

The enterprise resulted in failure. The company became embarrassed and insolvent; and judgments were rendered against it in the State of Virginia. Four such judgments are held by the four appellants here, aggregating upwards of $60,000 exclusive of interest, upon which writs of execution were issued, and returned unsatisfied.

On January 26, 1893, proceedings in equity were instituted by the insolvent company in the circuit court for Roanoke, against certain of the appellants here and certain other persons to vacate certain specified conveyances; and a cross-bill was filed, and certain other proceedings were had, with the result that the judgments rendered against the company were adjudged to be valid and subsisting liabilities; and John M. White, one of the appellees here, was appointed receiver of the company and ordered to collect the unpaid subscriptions. On October 5, 1900, the receiver reported that he was unable to collect any of the debts due to the company, and suggested that the creditors be decreed the amounts severally due to them, and receive separate executions therefor against the company. The suggestion was adopted by the court, and separate judgments were rendered for each of the creditors; but the executions issued thereon were returned unsatisfied.

Thereupon, on March 25, 1901, the proceedings now before us for review were instituted in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia by the filing of a bill in equity in the names of the four creditors, who are here the appellants, for the purpose of reaching the unpaid subscriptions of the stockholders. The suit was instituted against the company and the receiver and forty-nine enumerated stockholders, or representatives of deceased stockholders, whose unpaid subscriptions amounted on 1,329 shares to $66,450. Discovery was sought specially against two of the corporators, and in a general way against all of them, of the books, papers, records, stock books, account books, and other papers of the company; and the chief prayer of the bill was that the unpaid subscriptions should be decreed to be a trust fund for the payment of the debts of the company, and "that the defendants, and each of them, or such of them as are solvent, be decreed to pay the debts and claims of the said complainants, said amount in no case to exceed the amount due by them and each of them upon their unpaid subscriptions."

The bill was met by four several demurrers, in one of which two defendants joined, in another thirteen defendants; and by a plea on the part of one defendant to the effect that he had never subscribed to the stock of the company, and was not the representative of any such subscriber. The death of two defendants was suggested; and thirty do not appear to have answered in any way, so far as the record before us shows. The company did not answer; but there was an answer by White, the receiver, as well as a cross-bill, which was not a cross-bill in fact, but an auxiliary bill in aid of the original bill, substantially setting up the same facts and praying the same relief.

The several demurrers interposed by the defendants differ somewhat in the grounds of objection which they suggest; but the chief grounds are that the controversy is one cognizable at common law, and not in equity; and that there is an improper joinder of several distinct causes of action against several defendants, and even against one and the same defendant.

The court below sustained the demurrers on this last ground, making no adjudication as to the others; and the complainants having elected to stand by their bill, it dismissed both the original bill and the cross-bill. From the decree of dismissal the complainants have appealed.

In sustaining the demurrers and dismissing the bill of complaint the court below seems to have based its action exclusively on the authority of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Hale v. Allinson, 188 U. S. 56; and we are of opinion that it was fully warranted in so doing. The principle of that case seems to us to be here directly applicable.

In that case a receiver appointed in the State of Minnesota for an insolvent corporation organized under the laws of that State, instituted suit in equity in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, to enforce a statutory liability of stockholders of the corporation resident in Pennsylvania. It was held: (1) That no such suit could be maintained by a receiver outside of the State of his appointment, upon which proposition the rule laid down in the case of Booth v. Clark, 17 How. 322, and numerous subsequent cases, was reaffirmed; and (2) that whatever remedy existed in favor of the complainant was at law, and not in equity, the jurisdiction of which had been invoked on the ground of avoiding a multiplicity of suits. It was also held that the suit could not be maintained as an ancillary or auxiliary to the proceedings in Minnesota, and in aid of their enforcement.

With the first proposition here enunciated we are probably not concerned in the present case. For, although a foreign receiver comes in and sues by way of cross-bill, yet the main suit is not by him, but by creditors of the company, who may have an equity in their favor to reach the unpaid subscriptions as an equitable fund for the satisfaction of their debts. But the second proposition has a direct bearing on the case before us. Whether the suit is instituted by a foreign receiver or by creditors in their own right, the fact remains that there is an attempt here to combine forty-nine different, distinct, and separate suits in one. It is sought to enforce in one suit forty-nine distinct and independent contracts, which have no connection whatever with each other, further than that they are made with one and the same person as the obligee. But the fact that an obligee has forty-nine claims of the same nature and character against forty-nine different persons does not justify him in compelling those different persons to come into one suit, whether it be at common law or in equity, when there is nothing else in common between the parties. There is no common interest in such a case, such as the law would recognize as a good ground for the prevention of a multiplicity of suits. On the contrary, there is grave danger that such a combination of independent suits in one proceeding may entail far greater vexation, expense, and annoyance than it could possibly prevent.

In the case of Hale v. Allinson the Supreme Court of the United States quoted with approval and emphatically indorsed the views expressed in the case by the lower court, which are to be found in 102 Fed. Rep. 790, and which are as follows:

"In this question the interest of each stockholder is separate and distinct. The bill asserts the conclusiveness of the Minnesota decree upon the defendants, so far as the necessity for the assessment and the amount charged against each stockholder are concerned. Bank v. Farnum, 176 U. S. 640. Assuming that position to be sound—and, if I do not so assume it—if these questions are still open for determination, so far as the Pennsylvania stockholders are to be affected, the bill must fail for want of necessary parties—it is clear that only two classes of questions remain to be decided. The first is whether a given stockholder was ever liable as such, and the second is whether, if he were originally liable, his liability has ceased, either in whole or in part.

"Manifestly, as it seems to me, the defendants have no common interest in these questions, or in the relief sought by the receiver against each defendant. The receiver's cause of action against each defendant is, no doubt, similar to his cause of action against every other; but this is only part of the matter. The real issue, the actual dispute, can only be known after each defendant has set up his defense; and defenses may vary so widely that no two controversies may be exactly or even nearly alike. If, as is sure to happen, differing defenses are put in by different defendants, the bill evidently becomes a single proceeding only in name. In reality it is a congeries of suits with little relation to each other, except that there is a common plaintiff, who has similar claims against many persons. But, as each of these persons became liable, if at all, by reason of a contract entered into by himself alone, with the making of which his codefendants had nothing whatever to do, so he continues to be liable, if at all, because he himself, and not they, have done nothing to discharge the liability.

"Suppose A to aver that his signature to the subscription list was a forgery; what connection has that averment with B's contention that his subscription was made by an agent who has exceeded his powers? or with C's defense, that his subscription was obtained through fraudulent representations? or with D's defense, that he has discharged his full liability by a voluntary payment to the receiver himself? or with E's defense, that he has paid to a creditor of the corporation a larger sum than is now demanded? These are separate and individual defenses, having nothing in common; and upon each the defendant setting it up is entitled to a trial by jury, although it may be somewhat troublesome and expensive to award him his constitutional right. But even if the ground of diminished trouble and expense may sometimes be sufficient, I should still be much inclined to hesitate before I conceded the superiority of the equitable remedy in this case. Such a bill as is now before the court is certain to be the beginning of a long and expensive litigation. The hearings are sure to be protracted. Several, perhaps many, counsel will no doubt be concerned, whose convenience must be consulted. The testimony will soon grow to be voluminous. The expense of printing will be large. The costs of witnesses will not in any degree be diminished; and, if some docket costs may be escaped, this is probably the only pecuniary advantage to be enjoyed by this one cumbersome bill over separate actions at law."

The Supreme Court has been at pains to reproduce this portion of the opinion of the circuit judge as fully embodying its own views upon the subject; and for that reason we can do no better than reproduce it here. It seems to us to be conclusive of the subject-matter of controversy in the present case.

It is sought to differentiate the present case from that of Hale v. Allinson on the ground that this is a suit by creditors, and not by a foreign receiver, and that creditors must necessarily go into a court of equity in order to reach unpaid subscriptions of stockholders. Yet this does not reach the difficulty. Conceding, without determining the question, that the remedy of creditors in such cases is in equity, and not at common law, yet no more in equity than at common law is it allowable to join distinct and independent causes of action against different persons in no way connected with each other. The propostion to reach unpaid subscriptions for the payment of debts of an insolvent company is in no way different from an attempt to reach any other equitable assets.

If a judgment creditor is compelled to go into equity to reach equitable assets of his debtor, and upon one transaction A is alleged to hold some such assets, and upon another and wholly distinct transaction B is alleged to hold similar assets, we know of no rule of equity or of propriety that would justify the joinder of A and B and of the two transactions in one suit. A and B are entitled to stand alone, each for himself, and not to be involved in the litigation of each other. This would seem to be eminently reasonable; and this is what we understand to have been determined in the case of Hale v. Allinson.

It is claimed that there was a different ruling in the case of Hatch v. Dana, 101 U. S. 205. But it is conceded on behalf of the appellants that the case of Hatch v. Dana is not in conflict with the later case, and we are therefore not called upon to distinguish between the two. Moreover, the point made in the case of Hale v. Allinson does not seem to have been made in the case of Hatch v. Dana. In fact, in the case of Hatch v. Dana the contention was directly the reverse—that is, that all the stockholders should have been made defendants to the suit; and this contention the court overruled. The court there said:

"The liability of a subscriber for the capital stock of a company is several, and not joint. By his subscription each becomes a several debtor to the company, as much so as if he had given his promissory note for the amount of his subscription. At law, certainly, his subscription may be enforced against him without joinder of other subscribers, and in equity his liability does not cease to be several. A creditor's bill merely subrogates the creditor to the place of the debtor, and garnishes the debt due to the indebted corporation. It does not change the character of the debt attached or garnished." Hatch v. Dana, 101 U. S. 205-210.

Of course, if a liability is several, and neither joint nor joint and several, it is not competent for him who would enforce it, whether it be the original creditor or a representative of such original creditor or any person who becomes subrogated by operation of law to the place of such original creditor, to bring it into what might possibly be called hotchpot with other similar liabilities of other persons. Whether the remedy is at law or in equity, it is to be pursued individually against each subscriber in separate suits; and no two or more subscribers are to be joined together in one suit merely by reason of the fact that they are subscribers to the same capital stock of the same company.

Such being, as we are advised, the rule laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States, we must hold that the court below was right in its application. The decree appealed from will be affirmed, with costs. And it is so ordered.

Affirmed.

THE COLUMBIAN UNIVERSITY ET AL., APPELLANTS,

v.

BROOKE P. TAYLOR ET AL.

EQUITY PRACTICE; DEMURRER; SPECIAL CHARITABLE TRUST; FAILURE OF TRUST; RESULTING TRUST; LACHES.

1. A devise to an incorporated institution of learning in trust to devote the rents and profits thereof to the free education of "such young men as may desire to take advantage of the endowment," in order to fit them for admission to the Naval Academy of the United States, creates a special charitable trust; and such trust is not void for uncertainty or incapacity of execution apparent upon its face.
2. The invalidity of such trust not being apparent on its face, an allegation of such invalidity in a bill seeking to avoid the trust and for an accounting of rents and profits, is a mere conclusion of law not admitted by a demurrer; and a demurrer alleging the want of jurisdiction in equity is properly overruled.
3. Where, in such a case, the bill, filed more than fifteen years after the devisee entered into possession of the property, alleged that after efforts to carry out the intention of the testator the incapacity of the execution of the trust had been demonstrated, but it did not appear when the trust certainly came to this end, a demurrer to the bill on the ground of laches is properly overruled.
4. The trust created by the will not being a general charitable trust, but one expressly limited to the purposes specified, if the trust has failed of its object and thereby come to an end, a resulting trust at once arose in favor of, the heirs of the testator, enforcible in equity.

No. 1497. Decided March 7, 1905.

APPEAL (specially allowed) by defendants from an order of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in Equity, No. 24,288, overruling a demurrer to a bill in equity seeking to avoid a trust, etc. Affirmed.

Mr. W. F. Mattingly and Mr. John B. Larner for the appellants.

Mr. Henry E. Davis for the appellees.

Mr. Chief Justice SHEPARD delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is a special appeal allowed by order of this court from an order overruling appellant's demurrer to a bill in equity.

The bill filed by appellees as heirs at law of Levin M. Powell, deceased, seeks to avoid a trust created by the will of said Powell, and to recover certain real estate in the city of Washington, and to have an account and recovery of the revenues thereof.

It is alleged that said Levin M. Powell, an admiral on the retired list of the United States Navy, died January 15, 1885, leaving a will that had been executed October 27, 1884. The paragraph of the will which creates the trust reads as follows:

"Item:—Fifth, it being my wish and desire to make some contribution to the Navy of the United States, of which I have been for so many years, I hope, a worthy member, and so in a measure to pay off the debt I feel I owe the honorable profession I have pursued through a long lifetime, and to that end to establish in the Columbian University in the District of Columbia, in a manner most conducive for that purpose, a means for the education of such young men as may be willing to profit therefrom in the branches of education best fitted to prepare them for officers of the line in the Navy of the United States, or for the places of mates or captains in the merchant marine service of the United States, I do hereby give, devise, and bequeath to the said Columbian University and its successors all those certain pieces or parcels of ground situate and lying in said city of Washington, and known and distinguished on the plats of said city as lot lettered C, and the east five feet from front to rear of lot D, of Samuel D. King's subdivision of lots numbered one (1), two (2), three (3), thirty-two, and thirty-three (33), in square numbered one hundred and twenty-six (126), duly recorded in the surveyor's office of said city, beginning for the said parcel at a point on I street north, distant seventy-eight (78) feet west from the corner of I and 17th street, and running thence north parallel with 17th street one hundred and five (105) feet to a fifteen foot alley; thence west with said alley thirty-five (35) feet; thence south one hundred and five (105) feet to the north line of said I street; thence east with said I street thirty-five (35) feet to the point of beginning, together with all and singular the improvements, rights, privileges, and appurtenances to the same belonging, in trust for the purposes following, and for no other purpose whatever—that is, in trust to create an endowment to be known as the Admiral Powell endowment, and with that view to take the said property, and the same to rent from year to year or to lease for a term of years as to the trustees and overseers of said university shall seem best; and the rents, issues, and profits arising therefrom, after first paying out of the same the taxes, insurance, repairs, and other expenses, to devote as far as the same will go, under such regulations as to the said trustees and overseers may seem best, to the free education of such young men as may desire to take advantage of the said endowment by way of their preparation for entrance into the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland, or such as may fit them to become mates or masters in the merchant marine service of the United States, such preparation to be confined in the case of each young man so embracing the advantages of the said endowment to one year, and to include principally the studies following—that is to say, arithmetic, geometry, trigonometry, and astronomy, with the use of astronomical instruments, the construction of charts, and the application of this knowledge to hydrographical survey by latitude and longitude, and if possible such study as will give to such young men a knowledge of scientific voyages of discovery, and other matters relating to war and commerce on the high seas, and it is further my desire that this endowment shall, if possible, embrace in its benefits such apprentices as having filled their time in the great steam manufactory establishments of the country may apply for appointment from civil life in the steam engineer department of the United States Navy, to such I would like to have a year's education afforded under such regulations as the president and faculty of the university may think proper; and should it at any time for any reason be impossible to carry into effect the trusts, provisions, and conditions having relation to and herein imposed upon this bequest by me made for the creation of the endowment described on the part of the said Columbian University, or should it be made manifest at any time that the said trust is not being administered in accordance with my wishes and desires, and in conformity with the conditions specified, then, and in such case it is my will and desire that the said endowment shall be placed in other hands, and to that end, and upon the happening of the contingency mentioned, I do hereby give, devise, and bequeath the said property to the Johns Hopkins University of Baltimore, in the State of Maryland, and its successors, to be taken and held by the said university or the officers thereof proper for that purpose, upon the trusts and for the purposes hereinbefore particularly set forth in the bequest of said property to the Columbian University, in such manner that the purposes of the said endowment as by me indicated may be fully carried into effect."

The bill then proceeds to charge:

"VIII. That acting upon its supposed right under said devise, the said defendant, the 'Columbian University,' some time in the year 1885, took possession of said premises and real estate upon the trust set forth in said will and has had and retained absolute possession of the same ever since as it does now, having had the same rented to various tenants during said time.

"IX. That said defendant, the Columbian University, issues and has for more than sixteen years issued a catalogue, publishing its classes, the names of all its students, its instructors and officers, and the many and various schools of education it maintains; that this catalogue is widely circulated throughout the United States; that among other things it has from to time, during the past sixteen years, advertised 'the Powell scholarships;' that such advertisement was contained in the said catalogue for the scholastic years of 1900 and 1901, as will more particularly appear by reference to pages 94 and 95 of said catalogue, which is herewith filed as Exhibit No. 3, and which it is prayed may be taken and considered as a part hereof. That substantially the same advertisement has been inserted in said catalogue issued from time to time for the past sixteen years; that, notwithstanding the said wide circulation of said advertisements the said defendant, complainants are informed, believe, and therefore charge, has been wholly unable to execute said trust.

"X. That the complainants are advised and therefore charge and allege that said devise is so indefinite and the trust intended to have been created thereunder so uncertain as to its objects and subjects that it was impossible of execution by said defendant, the 'Columbian University,' or by the said defendant, the 'Johns Hopkins University,' has in no wise been executed by either of them in any respect whatsoever, and that it is now and ever will be impossible of execution by either of them.

"XI. That the complainants are advised and therefore charge and allege that by reason of the indefiniteness of the purposes of said intended trust, and the hopeless uncertainty of the possible beneficiaries, 'who may desire to take advantage of said endowment,' the said devise and the trust sought to have been created thereunder is wholly void and of none effect.

"XII. That complainants are advised and therefore charge that the defendants are without authority to carry said trust into execution."

The prayers are that the paragraph of the will before set forth be decreed to be void; that the trust be declared void, and the title to the premises be declared to be in the complainants; that the Columbian University be required to render a full account of the rents and profits of the said premises, and to pay over the sum ascertained to be due; that all necessary orders and references may be made, and for such other and further relief as the nature of the case may require.

1. For the purpose of determining the errors assigned on the order overruling the demurrer, the appellants insist that they have fully admitted the invalidity of the devise as contended for by the appellees. We can not proceed upon this assumption. The paragraph of the will set out in the bill speaks for itself, and the charge that it is void is a conclusion of law, which can not be admitted by demurrer as would be an allegation of fact. If, as contended by one party, and, for the purposes of the demurrer, admitted by the other, the invalidity of the devise is apparent upon its face, the appellees might probably have maintained an action of ejectment against the Columbian University to recover the possession of the premises. Ould v. Washington Hospital, 95 U. S. 303. But this action could not be maintained against the Johns Hopkins University, which is not a sharer of that possession, and which would not be bound by a judgment obtained against its codefendant. For the reason that the cause of action involves the construction of a trust, which is a matter peculiarly of equity jurisdiction, as well as the avoidance of a multiplicity of suits, where the defendants have a common interest in the essential questions of law and fact, it may be that the appellees would, at least, have their election to proceed in equity as they have done. 1 Pom. Eq., sections 139 and 181. However, under our construction of the paragraph of the will creating the trust, it is not necessary to determine whether the jurisdiction in equity is maintainable upon those grounds. In giving this construction we have been somewhat embarrassed by the admissions of the appellants and their failure to argue the question upon its merits.

We are of the opinion that the provision of the will providing for the free education of young men in order to fit them for admission to the Naval Academy of the United States, and making a devise therefor in trust to an incorporated institution of learning, creates a special charitable trust. Vidal v. Girard, 2 How. 127, 192 et seq.; Ould v. Washington Hospital, 95 U. S. 303; Speer v. Whitney, 32 W. L. R. 678; 2 Pom. Eq., secs. 1019, 1020, 1021, 1022, 1023, 1024.

We are also of the opinion that the trust is not void for uncertainty, or incapacity of execution apparent upon its face.

As said by Mr. Pomeroy: "One of the distinguishing elements of a 'charitable' as compared with an ordinary trust consists in the generality, indefiniteness, and even uncertainty which is permitted in describing the objects and purposes of the beneficiaries. From the very definition of a 'charitable trust' the beneficiaries are always an uncertain body or class; but the doctrine goes further than this. If the donor sufficiently shows his intention to create a charity, and indicates its general nature and purpose, and describes in general terms the class of the beneficiaries, the trust will be sustained and enforced, although there may be indefiniteness in the declaration and description, and although much may be left to the discretion of the trustees." 2 Pom. Eq., sec. 1025; Ould v. Washington Hospital, etc., 95 U. S. 303, 311; Speer v. Whitney, 32 Wash. Law. Rep. 678.

Under this construction the legal title passed to the trustee under the devise, and hence the court was right in overruling the demurrer on the ground of want of jurisdiction in equity.

2. If the invalidity of the devise were apparent upon its face, the objection on the ground of laches in bringing the suit would be fatal, for a court of equity, in a case like this, should, by analogy, apply the rule of the statute of limitations, which bars an action of ejectment after fifteen years from the time the right to maintain the action shall have accrued. Code D. C., sec. 1265. By the allegations of the bill, more than fifteen years elapsed between the time that the Columbian University entered into possession under the devise and the commencement of the suit, and there is nothing to show that the appellees were at that time under a disability of any character.

But, as we have seen, the right of action did not accrue immediately upon the entry of the Columbian University into possession under the devise. If there be a right of action at all it must fall under the ninth paragraph of the bill, which alleges that after efforts made to carry out the intention of the testator the incapacity of the execution of the trust has been demonstrated. The trust created by the will is not a general charitable trust, but is expressly limited to the purposes specified, and no other. If the trust has failed of its object by reason of the facts alleged, and thereby come to an end, a resulting trust at once arose in favor of the heirs at law of the testator, enforceable by this proceeding in equity. Hopkins v. Grimshaw, 165 U. S. 342, 353.

As it does not appear when the trust certainly came to this end, the learned justice presiding in the equity court did not err in holding that the right to maintain the suit had not been lost by laches on the part of the complainants.

The order will therefore be affirmed, with costs, and it is so ordered. Affirmed.

Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

ORRIN G. STAPLES, APPELLANT,
v.
JOHN C. JOHNSON.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION; PROBABLE CAUSE; EMBEZZLEMENT; INSTRUCTIONS.

1. To maintain a suit for malicious prosecution it is incumbent on the plaintiff to prove both malice and want of probable cause; but where there is any proof of malice and want of probable cause it is the duty of the court to submit the case to the jury.
2. The retention of money without concealment and under a claim of right made in good faith, is not embezzlement; and the question whether the claim be well-founded is immaterial.
3. Plaintiff was employed by defendant as night clerk in a hotel, and as such was given $10 with which to make change for patrons. He was discharged without notice and for a trivial cause, and at the time was paid a small sum which defendant claimed to be due him; but plaintiff, claiming to be entitled to more, refused to return the $10. Defendant retained his baggage and plaintiff recovered judgment in replevin. Defendant thereupon procured the arrest of plaintiff upon a charge of larceny, but before doing so consulted counsel and the prosecuting attorney, making no mention of plaintiff's claim. The larceny charge was dismissed, and defendant, after again consulting the prosecuting attorney and telling him of plaintiff's claim, but not of the replevin suit, made affidavit charging plaintiff with embezzlement, and he was arrested and held for the grand jury, which ignored the charge. Upon these facts, held, that the trial court properly refused to direct a verdict for defendant.
4. A prayer of defendant that if the jury found that defendant, at the time of his discharge, had the $10 in his possession, and refused to surrender it, alleging defendant to be indebted to him in some indefinite amount, which claim was unfounded and that nothing was due him, then defendant had probable cause for charging him with embezzlement, held properly refused as being too indefinite and uncertain, and as failing to take into consideration plaintiff's good faith in making the claim.

No. 1473. Decided March 7, 1905.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at Law, No. 45,626, entered upon the verdict of a jury in an action for malicious prosecution. Affirmed.

Mr. A. A. Birney and Mr. H. F. Woodard for the appellant.

Mr. A. A. Lipscomb, Mr. F. Edward Mitchell, and Mr. D. W. Baker for the appellee.

Mr. Justice DUELL delivered the opinion of the Court:

This appeal is from a judgment entered upon the verdict of a jury in favor of the appellee, the plaintiff below, for the sum of $2,500, with interest thereon from June 14, 1904, and for costs. The suit was one for malicious prosecution and the facts, so far as material to the determination of the questions involved in the appeal, are these:

The appellee on December 2, 1901, was in appellant's employ as night clerk at the Riggs House, at a monthly compensation of $20, with board and lodging, when, without notice and without reason assigned, he was discharged. He had been in the same employ and in various capacities for about three years. He had been night clerk for over a year and a half and as night clerk he was given $10 with which to make change for the patrons of the hotel. As he was about going off duty on the morning of his discharge the appellant directed him to go to a store and have a man sent to the hotel to lay carpets. He made no reply, but shortly went to the hotel dining room for his breakfast, and while eating it the appellant came to him and asked whether he had been on the errand, and learning that he had not, in a rough manner discharged him and told him to go to the office and get his pay. Later in the day he was given a small sum, stated to be the amount due him up to the time of his discharge. He made no objection to the amount at the time of the discharge. He gave up the key to his money drawer, and the clerk opening it and not finding the ten dollars, asked for it. He replied that appellant owed him more than that amount and that he would not pay it until he had a settlement. On going for his baggage he was told that it was locked up. He replevined it and judgment was given in his favor with costs, which appellant paid. On December 9, and after judgment had been awarded him in the replevin proceedings, he was arrested on a warrant sworn out by appellant charging him with larceny of the ten dollars, and was taken to the police station house but not detained. Later he gave bail, and finally, on December 19, a "nolle pros." was entered. On the same day he was arraigned in the Police Court, on the charge of embezzlement of the ten dollars, on a warrant sworn out by appellant. He was held to await the action of the grand jury, and later was discharged, the grand jury ignoring the charge.

Testimony was given to show that he was of good reputation for honesty and integrity prior to his arrest.

Before making the affidavit upon which the first arrest was made, appellant consulted his counsel, a reputable attorney, and informed him of appellee's employment, discharge, payment of wages as already stated, his retention of the ten dollars, and his refusal to return it. He did not inform his attorney that appellee claimed that money was due from him. He went with his attorney to the United States attorney for the District and stated to him the same facts. The latter directed him to go to the Police Court and take out a warrant for the arrest of the appellee for larceny. After that, and before making the affidavit upon which the warrant for embezzlement was issued, he informed the assistant United States attorney, prosecuting at the Police Court, of the same facts and of appellee's claim that appellant owed him money, whereupon he was advised to make the affidavit charging embezzlement. At no time did he inform his counsel, the United States attorney, or the assistant United States attorney, that appellee had brought a replevin suit against him to recover his baggage, and recovered judgment for costs, which he paid.

At the conclusion of the trial the appellant asked the court to give to the jury the four following separate instructions:

"1. The jury are instructed that upon the whole evidence their verdict should be for the defendant, and they should so find.

"2. It is not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover that the jury should believe that he was in fact not guilty of the offense charged in the warrant for embezzlement, and was wrongfully arrested and prosecuted; it is also incumbent upon him to satisfy the jury, by a preponderance of proof, that in the prosecution of the charge of embezzlement the defendant acted without probable cause, and was actuated by improper and malicious motives.

"3. If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant Staples acted on the advice of legal counsel in making the affidavit upon which the warrant for embezzlement issued, and under an honest belief that he was taking only such action as was warranted by law, he having first given a full statement of the facts of the case to counsel, the verdict should be for the defendant.

"4. If the jury find from the evidence that the plaintiff was in the employ of the defendant as night clerk, at defendant's hotel, and that as such clerk he was entrusted by defendant with ten dollars with which to make change for patrons of the hotel, and that such money was to be kept by the plaintiff in a particular drawer in the hotel office desk; and further find that at the discharge of the plaintiff from his employment on December 2, 1901, it was found he had taken the money in question from said drawer, and had it in his possession; and further find that plaintiff refused to surrender said sum of money, but kept the same, alleging that the defendant was indebted to him in some indefinite amount, and further that such claim by the plaintiff was unfounded, and that nothing was due him, then they are instructed that the defendant had probable cause for charging the plaintiff with embezzlement, and the verdict should be for the defendant."

The presiding justice granted the second and third prayers and refused the first and fourth. The appeal is based upon the alleged errors of the trial justice in refusing the first and fourth prayers.

Undoubtedly, to maintain a suit for malicious prosecution, it is necessary for the plaintiff to prove both malice and want of probable cause. In the case at bar such malice and probable cause must relate to the prosecution by appellant of the charge of embezzlement.

The appellee was not guilty of embezzlement because the money was retained without concealment and under a claim of right evidently made in good faith, and whether it was well founded or not is immaterial. If there was any proof of malice and lack of probable cause in the prosecution, it was clearly the duty of the trial justice to submit the case to the jury. Malice is a question exclusively for the jury, and while probable cause is a mixed question of law and fact, becoming a question of law after the facts are ascertained, and devolving upon the court the duty to instruct the jury as to the law arising upon the facts, the trial justice in view of the proofs in the case at bar would clearly have erred had he granted the first prayer and instructed the jury to find for appellant. There was evidence which required that question to be submitted to the jury. Appellant did not prefer the charge in hot blood. He was deliberate in all his actions. The appellee had been in his employ for something like three years. He was a man of good reputation. He had been trusted by appellant for a year and a half with the small sum he was charged with embezzling. He had been discharged without notice and for a trivial cause. There was enough in the facts to warrant the consideration by the jury of the question of malice. The appellant relies upon the advice of counsel as establishing probable cause. It was a question for the jury to say upon the evidence whether the advice of counsel was sought and acted upon in good faith and whether there was a full and fair disclosure of the facts. The third prayer, being one of those granted by the trial justice, correctly stated the law which should govern the jury in the consideration of the facts offered to prove probable cause. We think the charge was all that appellant was entitled to on the question of probable cause. Even conceding that the jury should not have been permitted to consider the evidence relating to probable cause, and that it was the province of the court to say that all the material facts had been stated by appellant to counsel and that he had acted in good faith, we may ourselves inquire whether there was probable cause, and if so, refuse to reverse the judgment. In Pangburn v. Bull, 1 Wend. 345, Judge Nelson (afterward associate justice of the United States Supreme Court) said, in referring to this question:

". . . still when the question of probable cause is submitted to a jury, who find for the plaintiff, and the court, on a review of the case, are satisfied that there evidently was a want of probable cause, and that the jury has not erred in point of law, the judgment will not be reversed for the error of the court in submitting the question to the jury."

We think the jury was warranted in finding want of probable cause. The trial justice was correct in his refusal to grant the first prayer. The fourth prayer was rightfully refused by the trial justice. Of the claim made by appellee that the appellant was indebted to him it is not necessary that the indebtedness should have been for a liquidated amount. If it be meant by the term "indefinite amount," employed in the prayer that it was for an unliquidated amount, the contention is not well founded. If it means something else, then the term itself is subject to the criticism of being indefinite. Furthermore the prayer was not one that could have been correctly granted, for, though appellee's claim may have been "unfounded," the question of his good faith in making it was also to be taken into account. The prayer was too indefinite and uncertain to be granted.

Believing that no error was committed by the trial justice in refusing to charge the first and fourth prayers, it follows that the judgment of the court below should be affirmed with costs, and it is so ordered.

Negligence of Parents as a Defense to Actions for Injuries to Children.

[New York Law Journal.]

The decision of the Supreme Court of North Carolina, in Davis v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. (October, 1904, 48 S. E. 591), brings up again for discussion the subject of the negligence of parents as affecting the right of recovery for injury to children. The rule seems to be well settled, the present opinion citing many cases in its support, that where the action is directly for a parent's benefit, the latter's contributory negligence in allowing the child to go into an unsafe place is a good defense. This case would also seem to hold in common with other cases that in an action brought by a parent as administrator, if he be also the sole beneficiary, his contributory negligence is fatal to recovery. There could be no objection to this position except an entirely formal and technical one. As matter of fact, in the North Carolina case a judgment for the plaintiff was reversed because the question of the father's contributory negligence (he being the suing administrator) was not submitted to the jury. It appeared, however, that the deceased child left a mother as well as a father, and the court suggests a serious difficulty in the following extract from the opinion:

"Under our Code (sec. 1478), where there is no widow, nor child, nor representative of a child, the estate of an intestate 'shall be distributed equally to every next of kin who are in equal degree.' The father and mother are, of course, 'next of kin in equal degree.' Under our former system, under which the personality of the wife became the property of the husband upon its receipt, of course, the husband was sole legatee of an infant child dying unmarried and without children. Constitution, article 10, section 6, now provides that 'all property, real and personal, to which she (a married woman) may, after marriage, become in any manner entitled, shall be and remain the sole and separate property of such female.' This seems reasonably clear, and it may well be that the wife, jointly with the husband, is the beneficiary of the action brought by the administrator of an infant child in cases like this. We refrain from passing upon the point because it is not raised in this record, but it may become pertinent in another trial. Interesting questions may arise where one parent is guilty of contributory negligence and the other is not.

"This point is presented in Wolfe v. RR. (55 Ohio St., 517, 536, 45 N. E., 708, 711, 36 L. R. A. 812) and RR. v. Gravitt (93 Ga., 369, 20 S. E. 550, 26 L. R. A., 553, 44 Am. St. Rep. 145), in both of which it is held that 'the defense of contributory negligence is available as against such beneficiaries as by their negligence contributed to the death of the deceased, but the contributory negligence of some of the beneficiaries will not defeat the action as to others who were not guilty of such negligence.' Of course, as in all other cases, the preliminary question to be decided is whether there was contributory negligence of one parent (or both) which was the proximate cause of the death, i. e., whether the defendant had or not the 'last clear chance' to avoid killing the intestate. Pickett v. RR., 117 N. C. 616, 23 S. E. 264, 30 L. R. A. 257, 53 Am. St. Rep. 611; Lassiter v. RR., 133 N. C. 247, 45 S. E. 570."

The actual decision being as above stated, this case, apparently, is authority for the proposition that the issue of the contributory negligence of the parent suing as administrator is material as a defense, where he is one of the beneficiaries of the child's estate.

The trend of the decisions very clearly is toward not permitting a negligent parent to profit by his own wrong, and in such view the question is renewed whether recognition of the New York doctrine of imputed negligence, vulnerable as it may be on abstract grounds, does not in the long run work substantial justice much more effectually than its denial. As a rule, the persons to be benefited by the recovery for an injury to a young child are its parents. Allowing recovery in such cases makes for the encouragement of the same neglect of children for speculative purposes which has, almost everywhere, led to limitations upon the amounts for which insurance may be procured on children's lives. Administration of the doctrine of imputed negligence would tend to obviate the perplexing questions as to parties to the recovery and the bearing as defenses of contributory negligence of different beneficiaries, which are suggested in the extract from the opinion of the North Carolina court above quoted.

Insurance—Assessment—Apportionment.

The Supreme Court of California held, in the case of Benjamin v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, that where an assessment insurance certificate and the constitution of the association at the time the certificate was issued provided that whenever the death fund should be insufficient to meet existing claims an assessment should be made upon the "entire membership in force at the date of the last death, the same to be apportioned among the members according to the age of each member," subsequent resolutions of the association classifying the members and placing all the members who entered prior to a date subsequent to that at which the certificate was issued in a class by themselves, and providing that as to such members the assessments should be apportioned according to the age of the member, but that as to members joining the association since that date the assessments should be apportioned as of the age of their entry into the association, were inoperative and void as against the holders of such certificates.

Dead Dog Leaves a $10,000 Estate.

Judge Francis W. Downs, of Binghamton, N. Y., today made application for the appointment of an administrator for the estate of his dog, Lee, which was run over by a fire engine and killed last week. Since his death, Lee has lain in state in a white casket covered with flowers. The body will be put in a receiving vault and kept until spring, when it will be buried.

Judge Downs, several years ago, bought $20,000 worth of western mining stock, which for a long time was supposed to be worthless. About a year ago it was announced that an assessment was to be made on this stock. In order to avoid paying the assessment, Judge Downs formally transferred his stock to Lee. The assessment was not made, however, and the mining stock soon began to appreciate in value, until it is said to be worth $10,000.

Now Judge Downs wants to regain the stock, but the only way will be to have the estate of the dog settled up by an administrator. Inasmuch as the dog died intestate, the question arises whether Judge Downs will be able to prove that he is next of kin to Lee, and legally entitled to the estate.—Central Law Journal.

Tribute of the Bar to Judge Charles C. Cole.

The bench and bar of this District united, on Friday afternoon, March 24, 1905, in paying tribute to the memory of Judge Charles C. Cole, whose recent death was so greatly deplored by his brethren at the bar and the community in general. Chief Justice Clabaugh, of the Supreme Court of the District, presided, and Mr. Wharton E. Lester acted as secretary. In taking the chair Judge Clabaugh spoke briefly of the character of Judge Cole. Messrs. Wm. F. Mattingly, Nathaniel Wilson, A. S. Worthington, J. J. Darlington, George E. Hamilton, and R. Golden Donaldson were appointed a committee on resolutions and presented a report eulogizing Judge Cole as a lawyer, judge, and Christian gentleman, and expressing the sorrow of the bar at his death. Eloquent and appropriate addresses were made by Mr. Mattingly, Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Walter C. Clephane, and Mr. R. Golden Donaldson. Mr. Donaldson, who entered Judge Cole's office when a boy and who was his law partner at the time of his death, spoke at the special request of the members of the committee. A full report of the proceedings will appear in our columns at an early day.

Charges of Professional Misconduct.

In a recent communication addressed to the members of the bar of this District by the Board of Directors and Grievance Committee of the District Bar Association, reference is made to the fact that alleged unprofessional conduct of certain individuals, members of the bar, has given rise to criticism of members of the profession generally. Attention is called to the provisions of section 6 of Common Law Rule 2 of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, requiring the United States attorney to investigate charges of professional misconduct preferred in writing against any member of the bar, and if probable cause be found to present to the court in general term charges and specification against such member; and to Article VI of the by-laws of the Bar Association, on "Grievances." The communication makes an earnest request that any and all acts of unprofessional conduct within the knowledge of any member of the bar shall be called to the attention of the Committee on Grievances, that action may be had thereon. The committee is composed of Messrs. Henry P. Blair, Wm. H. Dennis, J. Spaulding Flannery, Andrew Y. Bradley, and R. Golden Donaldson.

In another column will be found a report of the proceedings at the meeting of the bar of this District held to pay tribute to the late Franklin H. Mackey, one of its honored members. The addresses delivered on the occasion pay fitting tribute to the character of Mr. Mackey as a man and lawyer, as well as to the service performed by him for the profession in this District in the preservation of the decisions of the court in general term; and those whose privilege it was to enjoy an intimate acquaintance with him will recognize the justice of the tribute paid him. It is a sad coincidence that one of the speakers on the occasion was Judge Charles C. Cole, whose death so quickly followed that of Mr. Mackey.

IN MEMORIAM—FRANKLIN H. MACKEY.

Proceedings of the Meeting of the Bar of the District of Columbia, Held on February 10, 1905, to Take Appropriate Action on His Death.

In calling the meeting to order and announcing its object, Mr. Edward H. Thomas, first vice-president of the Bar Association, said:

"GENTLEMEN OF THE BAR: We have lost one of the old guard—among the few survivors with us of that distant, historic civil conflict.

"Franklin H. Mackey was a veteran alike of the sword and the law. The honor he gained as a soldier he kept undimmed as a lawyer.

"A quarter century's work at this bar is a test of mentality and character. Mr. Mackey met that test. He gained and kept our respect and affection, and we mourn him. He did unselfish, tiresome work for us, and left those who remember the need of collated local precedents twenty-five years ago in his debt by the publication of his reports and his work on Practice. These contributions to the legal literature of a by-gone day will keep his memory alive for years to come.

"The soldier, poet, author, lawyer, lovable associate, is gone. Death has closed the last chapter of his life. He will never again answer the roll call in camp or court.

"We meet to give expression to our sorrow for the loss sustained by the bar and to speak in loving recollection of the man."

Mr. Justice Barnard, of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, having been called to the chair as permanent chairman, and Mr. Charles W. Clagett as secretary, Mr. Edward A. Newman moved that the chair select a committee of nine members to draft resolutions expressive of the sentiments of the bar toward the deceased; and, the motion being adopted, the following gentlemen were named as such committee, viz: Mr. Augustus S. Worthington, Mr. Walter D. Davidge, Mr. William W. Boarman, Mr. Michael J. Colbert, Mr. Hayden Johnson, Mr. William A. Gordon, Mr. Arthur A. Birney, Mr. Edward A. Newman, and Mr. Francis H. Stephens.

The committee retired and afterward made its report, as follows:

Mr. A. S. WORTHINGTON:

Mr. Chairman, I am requested by the Committee on Resolutions to move the adoption of the following preambles and resolutions:

"Whereas the bar of the District of Columbia has learned with profound sorrow of the death of Franklin H. Mackey, an honored member of our profession; and

"Whereas we have met for the purpose of paying just tribute to the memory of our late brother, whom it hath pleased Divine Providence to take from us at a period of his life when his usefulness as a lawyer and a citizen had attained marked significance and merit; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That in the death of Franklin H. Mackey the bar of the District of Columbia has sustained the loss of one of its most erudite and distinguished members, the community an enterprising and respected citizen, and the family of the deceased a devoted and affectionate husband.

"Resolved, That to Franklin H. Mackey the bar and the people of this District generally are specially indebted for the assiduous and indefatigable labor which he exerted in compiling the decisions of our courts and publishing the same in reports which bear his name; which decisions were in a state of bewildering chaos at the time he undertook the task.

"Resolved, That we tender to the bereaved family of our deceased brother our sincere sympathy in their great sorrow.

"Resolved, That these resolutions be suitably engrossed and delivered to the widow, and that the president of the Bar Association be requested to move the court in general term to inscribe a copy of the same on its minutes."

Remarks of Mr. Augustus S. Worthington.

Mr. Chairman, in moving the adoption of these resolutions I can not refrain from saying a few words of the character of Mr. Mackey, with whom I was associated for so many years in this District in the practice of our profession.

As indicated by the resolutions, the particular thing with which Mr. Mackey is linked in our minds is the reports which bear his name. I doubt whether anybody, except those of us who have been here for more than twenty-five years—and it has been about that length of time since I made Mr. Mackey's acquaintance—can appreciate the service that was thus rendered the bar of this District. For a period of eighty years or more this jurisdiction (though its courts have wider jurisdiction than any other in the United States, deciding as they do questions of importance not only to the people of this District but of importance to people all over the country) was practically without any reports of its judicial decisions. We know, as a matter of fact, that the five volumes of notes which carry the name of Cranch, and which cover the period from 1801 to 1825 or thereabouts, were not in print and accessible to the bar, or any one else, until 1852; and when Mr. Mackey came here there were no reports of our judicial decisions except those notes, which are no reports at all, and the three volumes under the name of Mr. Justice MacArthur.

"Mr. Chairman, Mr. Mackey came to this District in 1877. He had been here but a few years when he discovered how necessary it was that the decisions of the Supreme Court of the District in General Term should be put in some useful form. He undertook to do it. As he states in the preface to his Reports, it was with him a labor of love. He did not expect any pecuniary return from his labor. And when we remember how few reports are sold in this jurisdiction, we may not doubt the absolute verity of that statement. By the performance of this task—begun and completed for no other reason than that he might pay a debt which he believed he owed to the profession—and by his efforts as editor of THE LAW REPORTER, in which capacity he promptly published every decision of importance, Mr. Mackey rendered the bar and the people of this District a most signal service.

Franklin H. Mackey was not a man to whom the ordinary observer would assign the characteristics which he possessed and which did him honor. Outwardly his life was illustrated by his reports and by the practice of his profession; but he was a man given to charitable deeds, quietly and unostentatiously performed. I am told that, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Mackey was not the possessor of large means, yet he undertook and carried out the education of two boys at his own expense.

Mr. Mackey and I were born in the same year. When the war between the North and the South came he was a resident of South Carolina, and his sympathies were with the Confederate cause. Though he was at that time a boy but 18 years old, he entered the service of the Confederacy and served throughout the war. I am told that he was in thirty battles during that strife (where you and I, Mr. Chairman, were on the other side), and that more than one battlefield of that war was stained with his blood. And whatever may have been his virtues, for whatever cause his friends may remember him with affection or with pride, surely as we are constituted there is nothing for which we admire him more than that in vindication of a cause he believed to be just he followed those who had the success of that cause at heart, even to the cannon's mouth.

Remarks of Mr. J. McDowell Carrington.

Mr. Chairman, my experience as a participant on occasions of this solemn character is very limited, and it is with no little embarrassment, therefore, that I now rise.

My acquaintance with Mr. Mackey during the last four, five, or six years of his life was very intimate, as intimate, perhaps, as was the acquaintance of any other member of the bar, with the possible exception of one or two. I had the opportunity of knowing him not only as a lawyer, but as a man—a gentleman.

Those who have preceded me, Mr. Chairman, have spoken of the fact that they were in the opposing army to that in which Mr. Mackey fought in the great contest that made this nation tremble between the years 1861 and 1865. It so happened that in the providence of God Mr. Mackey and I were together. I have frequently heard his sentiments with regard to that contest, and I know the high, patriotic feelings he had toward that section of the country in whose interests he made himself so conspicuous in battle. I know how loyal he was, as were his great ancestors who were instrumental in forming the Constitution of this nation; yet, while he was later devoted to our country of today, as were those ancestors of his in the formation of our Government, he never once yielded the belief that he was doing right in the part he took in the great conflict, and he never for one moment thought that the conduct of his comrades should be forgot. On the contrary, he always expressed himself, publicly as well as privately, as believing that under the emotions which actuated those people and behind the training which they had, was the conviction that they were American patriots, contemplating the entire country—that within the hearts of those people who struggled, as he did, who risked life, as he did, was the faith that they struggled and risked their lives to maintain the true principles of the American Constitution.

But that question should not be discussed here. I was led into it by my friends who spoke so kindly and delicately about it. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, their delicacy touched me.

But my friends have not spoken of all the beautiful virtues which adorned Mr. Mackey's character. I never saw a more tender man or a more domestic one. I never saw (if I may delicately allude to it) a sweeter association than existed between him and his bereaved wife. I never saw brothers more devoted than were his brothers to him. I never saw young men receive more lavish charity than did those young men to whom Mr. Worthington alluded.

As has been said, not only was Mr. Mackey a lawyer, he was something beside. Versed in the classics, schooled in Latin, acquainted with Greek, and skilled in the use of two modern languages, he was a scholar as well. And he was not unknown as a poet. He published a volume of his verses. In that volume are many beautiful gems, and they point out his true character—a magnanimous man.

Mr. Mackey was a modest man. He was a lovable man. Those who knew him best loved him most. He was at all times diffident—a little too reserved, perhaps; but those who were fortunate enough to know him well, knew him to love him.

Mr. Chairman, after the most intimate acquaintance with Mr. Mackey I may say of him, without the slightest hesitation, that which I could not say if he were alive. It might then be considered a compliment—that which a modest man like he was might shrink from. I can say that Mr. Mackey was one of the most generous men I ever saw. If generosity can be a fault, it was one with him. He made a good deal of money in his profession, but he was careless with it. It was at the command of the needy. Even where the object was one that should not be encouraged, so generous and impulsive were his motives, that into his pocket his hand would go, and his last dollar would be contributed toward that object.

"And e'en his failings lean'd to virtue's side."

Remarks of Mr. Charles C. Cole.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to add a few words to what has already been said in appreciation of the life and character of our deceased brother.

Undoubtedly, as has been so well said by Mr. Worthington, the profession in the District of Columbia owes Mr. Mackey a debt of gratitude, not only because of his valuable services in publishing the reports of decisions in this jurisdiction, and in editing THE LAW REPORTER, in which work he contributed for many years far more than his share and far more than it has been the lot of most of us to contribute to the general advantage of the profession, and this he did without any adequate compensation therefor. His only incentive in these labors was his devotion to the profession and his desire for its advancement.

Mr. Mackey was also a man of kind, generous, and charitable impulses. You, Mr. Chairman, and all of us can bear testimony to the fact that in many cases he has devoted his time and services to clients from whom he could expect but small, if any, compensation. Neither the size of the fee nor the measure of compensation to which he was entitled ever stood in the way of his taking charge of a case if it commended itself to his judgment, and the circumstances of the client would not admit of a cash retainer.

Mr. Mackey came to this District about the time that I did, and from the very first I came to know him quite intimately, and our intimacy continued to the time of his death. I was associated with him in many cases and in many different ways. And, Mr. Chairman, I learned to respect him, not only as a man and lawyer, but I learned to love him for the many beautiful traits of character which he possessed.

Mr. Mackey's early experiences and my own were not dissimilar. He came up from the South—I went down from the North. We met as boys, each fighting for what he believed to be right, on the many bloody battlefields of Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania. In many conversations that I had with him, after we became acquainted here, we compared experiences in the same friendly spirit as I have frequently done with comrades in those battles. He had no bitterness of feeling growing out of that conflict, and as a loyal American rejoiced in a reunited country.

As we contemplate his unselfish life and services we can have no other feeling than one of admiration for his character as a man, a lawyer, and a soldier.

Remarks of Mr. M. D. Rosenberg.

Mr. Chairman, I would feel that I had been neglectful in an important duty did I not at this time attest the things which have been said at this meeting with respect to the splendid character of Mr. Franklin H. Mackey.

My worthy brethren who have preceded me in their remarks have informed us concerning his qualities as a soldier, poet, and lawyer. I had not the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with Mr. Mackey in the earlier years of his career, and therefore knew him not as a soldier, except in the latter years of his presence among us, when he was battling in the peaceful realms of life for the supremacy of what was right and what was just. I knew him not as a poet, except in the more recent years, when he exhibited those poetic instincts which embellished his personality as a thoroughly aristocratic gentleman. But I did know Mr. Mackey as a lawyer. It was as a lawyer that I, not very long since, made his acquaintance. His superior knowledge of a particular branch of the law involved in a case in which I was attorney induced me to seek his counsel. I called on him at his office, where he had spent so many years of usefulness to himself and to the community at large, and it was there that his many lovable qualities were brought to my particular attention; and among the many qualities possessed by Mr. Mackey, the one of loyalty appeared at all times prominent—loyalty not alone to himself, but to his friends, his clients, and his associates in practice. In my limited association with him at the bar the observation was forcibly impressed upon me that he was most diligent in the preparation of his cases, not only with regard to the law, but with regard to the facts as well, for he was moved by a sincerity which never waned and which prompted a personal examination of each witness, as well as the closest attention to other important details in the preparation of a case. He believed that the interests of his client demanded that he himself should know that every step necessary for the proper conduct of a case had received his timely attention, so that when his cases were called for trial he found himself well equipped, and there asserted his clients' interests in a manner so capable and conscientious as to win the admiration of the bench as well as of the bar.

Mr. Chairman, I deem it a marked distinction to add my praises, and should be glad to say much more concerning the impressions created by my associations with him, but the important events in his career, as well as the many sterling qualities possessed by him, have been so carefully reviewed by my brethren here that I will simply conclude with the observation that within Mr. Mackey's large and manly frame there beat a heart equally as large, actuated by the loftiest of motives and pulsating with the most generous of impulses, and that those who knew him well will agree that those years which finally crowned him with their snows also brought the laurels of veneration and the blessings of a pure renown.

Remarks of Mr. H. E. Davis.

Mr. Chairman, I suppose that every one here at times feels, as I know that I have done, that there is a certain perfunctoriness about occasions like this, and I suppose that every one, like myself, never gets under the spell of one of them that he is not ashamed to have felt that. Pessimistic we get, the best of us, at times, and we ought to be thankful that occasions like this do come around to make us blush at our pessimism.

It is a long time, twenty-five years, to many who are in this room, and those who, like myself, have spent that length of time in the practice of our profession here, have seen the warriors of our calling go, one after another, not to hear the trumpet again in this life, and we can not escape the force of the lesson that comes to us as we reflect upon the fact.

I am a young old man, twenty-five years at this bar, and during all that time the men who have been my seniors have been slipping away from me, one after another, and I am standing here looking upon those who have come after me, whom I remember as mere striplings, it seems. When they come to take our places in our ranks, I realize a strange sense in respect of the changed attitude, or rather the changed view with which I look upon my calling.

It is a sad thing to say; it is a sadder thing to know, but there is not the knightliness at the bar that there once was—I mean it is not so general; it is not so readily to be observed. The spirit of the times, which we are apt to characterize as commercialism, has made its mark upon us, and it is a delightful thing to meet in tribute to a man from whom the knightly spirit of our calling never passed.

No one who ever saw Franklin H. Mackey walk up and down the streets would ever credit him with the possession of the qualities that those who knew him nearly were sure he possessed. Brave as he was as a soldier, faithful and valiant as he was as a lawyer, true and high-toned as he was as a man, he had never "worn his heart upon his sleeve for daws to peck at." The man that he was was within him, and it fell to the lot of comparatively few of his brothers to know what that inner Franklin H. Mackey was. But I have pleasure in paying my weak tribute to the character of the man whom I knew as Mackey; the man of true instinct; the man of warm heart; the man of high ideal; the man of fidelity to duty; the man of charity to his fellow man; and whatever may have been the limitations of his talents, for talents he undoubtedly had, he has gone to his grave, entitled to have it said of him that the best he had, he gave freely; the best he had, he gave under a noble impulse; the best he had, he gave without stint; the best he had, he gave with good purpose. It ought to be a long time before we forget him.

Remarks of Mr. Justice Barnard.

Gentlemen of the Bar, a number of those who have spoken, and a number of those whom I see present in this meeting, remember Mr. Mackey when he first came to the bar of this District. So that his whole career as a lawyer in this jurisdiction is within the circle of their memories. I myself have been thinking back to the time when I first saw him.

When Mr. Mackey came to the bar of this District I was here in active practice. I was opposed to him in a number of cases. I remember his first case and how I was impressed with the energy and industry he displayed in the conduct of that cause. He has frequently appeared before me since I have been on the bench, and in all the time I have known him there has been no flagging of that energy or that industry. And it seems to me, gentlemen, that the distinguishing features of his character as a lawyer were energy and industry. Then, too, he was ever earnest in the presentation of his case, whether to court or jury. Before the former he was ready with authority to fortify his position; before the latter he was equally ready with facts.

And, gentlemen, I may remark that Mr. Mackey was a man who carried no bitterness in his heart. I have talked with him many times of the strife between the States in the early '60's, and there appeared to be a total absence of any bitterness of feeling because of the result of that strife, though, of course, he never relinquished the conviction that he did right when he entered the Confederate service. His work there was as conscientiously performed as it was in the conduct of his causes at the bar.

I simply desire to add these few words to the remarks that have been made to bear testimony to the character of our departed brother, because I was here when he came, and am familiar with his whole career at this bar.

The resolutions having been unanimously adopted, the meeting adjourned.

SAMUEL GASSENHEIMER, PLAINTIFF IN ERROR,
v.
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

POLICE REGULATIONS; OBSTRUCTING STREETS.

Proof merely that an automobile owned by the proprietor of a hotel, and kept for the accommodation of his guests, was allowed to stand in front of the hotel for two hours, is not sufficient to support a conviction under an information charging him with unnecessarily obstructing the street.

No. 1489. Decided March 8, 1905.

IN ERROR to the Police Court of the District of Columbia. Reversed.

Mr. W. J. Lambert and Mr. D. W. Baker for the plaintiff in error.

Mr. A. B. Duvall, Mr. E. H. Thomas, and Mr. F. H. Stephens for the defendant in error.

Mr. Justice DUELL delivered the opinion of the Court:

The plaintiff in error was found guilty by the Police Court of the District of Columbia on an information against him, charging him with unnecessarily obstructing the free passageway of a certain street in the District, and hindering and delaying traffic thereon, by allowing an automobile to remain on the street in front of the Hotel Lawrence for a period of two hours.

Exceptions having been taken to the rulings of the court on matters of law, and this writ of error having been granted, we are called upon to review the judgment.

The information in the case was filed under section 14 of article 10 of Police Regulations, which, in part, reads as follows:

"No vehicle shall unnecessarily obstruct the free passageway of any street or avenue, nor hinder nor delay the passage of any other vehicle," etc.

The testimony adduced on the part of the District was that of an inspector who testified that he saw Mr. Gassenheimer's automobile standing in front of his hotel for two hours on September 22 without engagement; that he hired it from Mr. Gassenheimer, moved away in it, used it for an hour, and paid for it. The automobile was a licensed public vehicle.

The plaintiff in error was called as a witness on his own behalf. He testified that he had the automobile in front of his place for the guests of the hotel; that he kept an automobile stable, having an office therefor in his hotel, and having a telephone in the stable and in his hotel for automobile business; that he orders automobiles from the stable for guests of the hotel; that the persons in charge of the automobiles are not permitted to hire them to anybody, but that the hiring has to be done through the clerk in the office; that the automobiles do not obstruct the street or affect anybody's free passage of the street, and that the street is used as a hack stand at night; that he rents his automobiles to anybody that comes to the office, and that anybody can drop into the hotel and hire an automobile from the clerk who is there for the purpose of renting them.

There is no evidence that he knowingly permits any automobile standing in front of his hotel to be rented to persons other than its guests. In our opinion the testimony adduced was not sufficient to sustain the information, and no conviction should have been had.

The courts have repeatedly recognized the rights of the owners of land abutting on a public highway to encroach upon the primary right of the public to a limited extent and for a temporary purpose. Tucker v. N. Y., O. & W. R. Co., 157 N. Y. 312.

Whether a particular use of a street is a reasonable use or otherwise is a question of fact depending on all of the circumstances of the case. Flynn v. Taylor, 127 N. Y. 596.

In the latter case it was held that, in order to justify the encroachment by one in possession of land abutting upon the street, such encroachment must be reasonably necessary for the transaction of his business and it must not unreasonably interfere with the rights of the public.

This case, upon the testimony, falls within the decision of this court in the case of the Willard Hotel Co. v. the District of Columbia, 23 App. D. C. 272: 32 Washington Law Reporter, page 163, unless it is to be differentiated by reason of the fact that the party hiring the automobile was presumably not a guest of the hotel. The testimony, however, shows that the automobile was kept for the use of the guests of the hotel. That testimony is not contradicted save by implication. It can hardly be claimed that a hotel proprietor, or the carriage clerk, is presumed to know every guest of the hotel. Admitting that a hotel proprietor can not lawfully rent a vehicle kept standing in front of his hotel except to his guests, it would be very unjust to convict him of the offense of unnecessarily obstructing the free passageway of the street, and delaying traffic thereon, because such automobile chanced to be rented to some one coming into the hotel and engaging it who proved not to be a guest. We are of the opinion that proof that an automobile stood in front of a hotel for two hours is not sufficient to sustain a conviction that the free passageway of a street has been unnecessarily obstructed and traffic thereon hindered and delayed.

There is absolutely no affirmative testimony whatever to show that traffic was delayed or hindered, to the slightest degree, by reason thereof. The information was not based upon the allegation that a public cab stand was maintained in an unauthorized place, and there is no proof that the plaintiff in error rents his automobiles, standing in front of his hotel for hire, to any and all persons who may desire to use them. The information can not be sustained upon any inference. It requires sufficient legal proof in order that such a charge be sustained. We do not now pass upon the right of a stableman to keep his vehicles standing in the street in front of his office ready for hire.

For the reason that the record fails to show any violation of the police regulation upon which the information was based, the decision of the Police Court was erroneous and its judgment must be reversed, with costs, and cause remanded with direction to discharge the defendant. It is so ordered.

Reversed.

JOSIAH MILLARD, APPELLANT,

v.

ELLIS H. ROBERTS, TREASURER, ETC., ET AL.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW; REVENUE LEGISLATION; APPROPRIATION OF PUBLIC MONEY FOR PRIVATE USE.

The act of Congress of February 28, 1903 (32 Stat. 909), to provide a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, construed in connection with the act of Congress of February 12, 1901 (31 Stat. 774), providing for the elimination of grade crossings in this District, and carrying an appropriation of $1,500,000 to be paid to each of two railroad companies as the share of the District in carrying these acts into effect, held not unconstitutional and void as being an appropriation of public money for private use nor by reason of the fact that the bills originated in the Senate and not in the House of Representatives.

No. 1481. Decided March 21, 1905.

APPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in Equity, No. 24,131, dismissing a bill to prevent payment of money appropriated by acts of Congress. Affirmed.

Mr. Josiah Millard and Mr. W. Preston Williamson for the appellant.

Mr. Morgan H. Beach, Mr. Geo. E. Hamilton, Mr. M. J. Colbert, Mr. F. D. McKenney, and Mr. J. S. Flannery for the appellees.

Mr. Justice MORRIS delivered the opinion of the Court:

The appellant, as complainant, filed his bill in equity in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to enjoin the payment by the Treasurer of the United States of any money of the District of Columbia to any person whatsoever in pursuance of the act of Congress of February 28, 1903, 32 Stat. 909, entitled "An act to provide for a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," construed in connection with the act of Congress of February 12, 1901, 31 Stat. 774, providing for the elimination of grade crossings of railroads in this District, and to prohibit the carrying into effect of the provisions of these acts of Congress, and to have the acts themselves declared null and void, as without constitutional warrant. The purpose of the bill is to prevent the payment by the Treasurer out of the funds of the District of Columbia of the sum of $1,500,000 to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, and of an equal sum to the Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington Railroad Company, as the share of the District in carrying these acts into effect.

A demurrer was interposed to the bill, and the demurrer was sustained and the bill dismissed. From the decree of dismissal the complainant has appealed.

As we understand it, there are two questions raised by the appellant in this case: (1) That the appropriation of the money of the District of Columbia toward the payment of the expense provided by the acts of Congress in question is that of public money for a private use, and is therefore unconstitutional and void; and (2) that the acts are void because they are revenue measures and originated in the Senate instead of the House of Representatives, in which latter body the Constitution of the United States requires that all bills for raising revenue shall originate. We will first consider the second question.

1. It is conceded that the acts in question originated in the Senate. It is so alleged in the bill, and conceded by the demurrer, and the statement is not controverted. But the plain answer to this contention is that the acts in question are not bills for the raising of revenue, but at the utmost bills for the expenditure of revenue or appropriation bills, where the appropriation is incidental to some other purpose. It may be that the general appropriation bills, so called, as well as bills for the raising of revenue, should originate in the House of Representatives; and we believe the fact to be that they always do so originate. But a bill plainly for another purpose, and which only incidentally carries an appropriation with it in order to give it effect, although such an appropriation may in fact be a necessity for the efficiency of the bill, is not constitutionally barred from originating in the Senate. If it were, possibly one-half or three-fourths of the legislation of Congress would be null and void. Every bill granting a pension, every bill providing for any additional employee in any of the executive departments, every bill providing for an additional circuit or district judge of the United States, every bill providing for an additional vessel for the Navy or an additional regiment for the Army, and hundreds of other bills of various kinds, would be outside of the range of consideration by the Senate until they had been acted on by the House of Representatives, and the body sometimes known as the upper house of Congress would be reduced almost to a condition of "innocuous desuetude," which is certainly very far from the real condition as it exists today. This has not been the practice of Congress; and this is not the reasonable understanding of the clause in the Constitution which remits to the House of Representatives alone the authority to originate bills for the raising of revenue. The principles invoked by the appellant are correct, but they are inapplicable; and no authority is cited to show that such legislative enactments as those now under consideration have been held invalid, for the reason that they contravened the organic law in the matter of their origination. See Story on the Constitution, sec. 880; Twin City Bank v. Nebeker, 167 U. S. 196.

2. The appellant's second contention is more plausible; namely, that the appropriation of money in the acts of Congress mentioned is an appropriation of public money for private use, which it is not lawful for the legislature to make. Here also the principle is sound for which the appellant contends. It is contrary to right and justice and to the fundamental principles of our Government to take the property raised by taxation for public purposes and to devote it to private uses, even under the pretense that these private uses subserve the general interest of the public. The authorities, if authorities are needed, are believed to be uniform in support of this proposition, although there are, no doubt, great divergencies of opinion as to what constitute private as distinguished from public uses. But the defect in the appellant's position is that there is not here any appropriation of public funds for private uses.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company had a valid contract with the District of Columbia, sanctioned by Congress, whereby it was authorized to procure the site of its present station and to establish and maintain that station there until the year 1910. It is now proposed to take that station away from it and to compel it to incur vast expense for the construction of a new station upon another site. This it is perfectly competent for Congress to do, but not without payment for the property taken and without some compensation for the change required to be made. And the case is not substantially different with the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company. On the face of the acts of Congress the appropriation purports to be in compensation for the rights and privileges which the railroad companies agree to surrender, and for the magnitude of the work, otherwise perhaps needless, which they agree to perform. The case is practically that of a contract between the United States and the District of Columbia on the one side, and the railroad companies on the other, whereby the railroad companies agree to surrender certain rights, rights of property as well as other rights, and to construct a work of great magnitude, greater perhaps than their own needs require, but which Congress deems to be demanded for the best interest of the national capital and by the public at large; and for this surrender of right and this work of magnitude commensurate with the public demand, Congress agrees to pay a certain sum, partly out of the funds of the United States and partly out of the funds of the District of Columbia. It is a simple case of bargain and sale, like any other purchase. Some persons there may be who may think the amount of the purchase money too great; but that is a consideration for Congress, not for the courts.

Much of the argument on behalf of the appellant is devoted to the subject of taxation, and the matter of direct and indirect taxation; but, in the view which we take of this case, the argument is wholly irrelevant. We do not think that any question of taxation is involved here. Of course, the money appropriated is, or is to be, the result of taxation, but of general, and not of any special taxation. No special tax is sought to be laid to meet the appropriation. The question in the case is simply as to the use of the money after it has been raised; and we see no good reason to question the authority of Congress to make the appropriation.

Recognizing, as we do, the patriotic purpose of the appellant to defend and protect the rights of the citizen against unlawful misappropriation of the public funds, raised from him and others by taxation, yet we find here no case of excess or abuse of its power by the legislative authority. We should be slow in any event to question the constitutionality of Congressional legislation; and the case should not be a doubtful one where the courts will assume to declare such legislation invalid.

We are of opinion that the decree appealed from was right, and that it should be affirmed, with costs. And it is so ordered.

Affirmed.

Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

JOHN W. HAYES ET AL., APPELLANTS, v. SIMON BURNS ET AL.

EQUITY; CORPORATIONS; RIGHT TO CORPORATE OFFICES; QUO WARRANTO.

1. The proper remedy to determine the question of title to office in a private corporation is by quo warranto, and not by a suit in equity.
2. Where it appears that the title to offices in a domestic corporation is the sole or main question at issue in a suit in equity, that the defendants are in possession under a claim of election, and that the only standing of complainants is by virtue of a claimed election, equity is without jurisdiction to try the question, and the bill should be dismissed, leaving complainants to determine the question by quo warranto.

No. 1470. Decided March 22, 1905.

APPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in Equity, No. 24,054, in suit to determine the respective rights of parties claiming to be the duly elected officers of the Knights of Labor, for an injunction, etc. Reversed.

Mr. Henry E. Davis and Mr. E. B. Kimball for the appellants.

Mr. Charles C. Cole, Mr. R. Golden Donaldson, and Mr. John Ridout for the appellees.

Mr. Justice DUELL delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is a suit in equity begun by Simon Burns and five associates, claiming to be the general officers of the Knights of Labor, a corporation organized under an act of Congress relating to the incorporation of trade unions in the District of Columbia, which corporation was joined as a party complainant. John W. Hayes and five associates, also claiming to be the general officers of the same corporation, and in possession of its property, were made defendants.

The bill alleges that the individual complainants are the legally elected and duly qualified and installed officers of the Knights of Labor, and entitled to the possession of its property, and that the defendants are not such officers, but are in possession of its property, which they are converting to their own use and wasting; that the defendants threaten to remove the property out of the jurisdiction of the court or to destroy it; that the corporation known as the Order of the Knights of Labor consists of a general assembly and of many subordinate organizations or assemblies situated in various sections of the country; that it derives the revenue necessary to carry on its work and its functions as a beneficial labor organization from a per capita tax paid to its general officers by the various subordinate lodges and assemblies, and that the defendants are collecting these taxes and converting them to their own uses; that they have fraudulently conspired to get possession of the books, records, and other property of the organization; and that they are insolvent. The bill also recites at length the history of the meeting of the corporation at Niagara Falls, N. Y., in November, 1902, at which both sets of men claim to have been elected its general officers. The relief prayed is that the court decree that the complainants are the lawful officers and members of the general executive board of the order of the Knights of Labor, and that the defendants are not such officers and members of the executive board. Incident to this relief the court is asked to enjoin the defendants from selling or otherwise interfering with the property of the corporation; from collecting the taxes from the subordinate assemblies; from interfering with the complainants in assuming control of the property, or from discharging their duties as such officers. A discovery and account is also claimed of the moneys collected by the defendants; and an order that the defendants turn over to the complainants all of the property of the corporation, much of which is specifically enumerated.

The answer is voluminous but in effect it denies that the complainants are the general officers of the corporation and alleges that the defendants are such officers; it denies that the order of the Knights of Labor is a party complainant; admits that the defendants are in possession of the property of the order, and that they are collecting the taxes due from the subordinate assemblies; denies that they are insolvent; denies that they intend to remove the property from the District of Columbia, or to destroy it. In short, the answer denies all the material averments by virtue of which the complainants ask the interposition of a court of equity. It then proceeds to give a history of the Knights of Labor; its organization and its many subordinate elements; the duties of its various officers, and gives the defendants' version of the Niagara Falls meeting at which they claim to have been elected, and thereafter duly installed as the lawful officers of the corporation. In the fortieth paragraph of the answer the jurisdiction of the court, sitting as a court of equity, is denied and it alleges that the bill does not set forth any ground for equitable relief. In the view we take of the case a demurrer might well have been filed to the bill, thereby relieving the parties of the great expense of the trial and the court of much labor.

Upon the bill, affidavits, and other papers a temporary injunction was granted. This injunction, upon the answer and affidavits and exhibits filed on behalf of the defendants, after hearing counsel for the respective parties, was dissolved. Later on the complainants moved for and obtained a restraining order to the effect that both parties be restrained from holding, or attempting to hold, any general assembly of the Knights of Labor. Shortly thereafter an order was made that the evidence be taken in open court so far as it related to the Niagara Falls meeting at which the parties to this suit claimed to have been elected general officers of the order, and also as the alleged expulsion of the complainant Hicks.

Thereupon the court proceeded to the trial of the cause, and proofs consisting of some nine hundred printed pages were taken. The trial resulted in a decree for the complainants, the salient feature of which is that the complainants are found to be the general officers of the order and the members of the general executive board of the order of the Knights of Labor, and that the defendants are not such officers and members of the executive board. Incident to this, and properly so, if the first finding was one that the court could make, an account and injunction were ordered and the defendants directed to turn over the property of the order to the complainants.

From this decree the defendants have taken this appeal, alleging various grounds of error which may be summarized as follows: 1st. That the court erred in holding the case to be one over which a court of equity has jurisdiction; and, 2d. Admitting that the case be one within the jurisdiction of a court of equity, the court erred, in light of the testimony, in granting a decree in favor of the complainants.

The first question requires for its decision the determination as to the nature of the proceeding. This may be easily gathered from a study of the pleadings, the proofs, the statements of counsel, and the opinion of the learned justice before whom the case was tried.

The pleadings clearly show that the main question, and the one without which no other question could have been decided, was the right of the rival parties to the offices to which each claimed to have been elected at the same meeting of the order in November, 1902, at Niagara Falls. The bill attempts to thinly conceal that this is the principal question by alleging various grounds for equitable relief, and by praying for such relief; but when the case comes on for trial the complainants' counsel frankly states that the "general object of the bill is to declare that the complainants are the general officers, the general executive board, of the order of the Knights of Labor, and that the defendants are not such, each set of officers claiming to have been elected to those respective offices at the meeting of the general assemby of the Knights of Labor which met at Niagara Falls on the 11th of November of last year, 1902." The proofs are directed to that question, and it is self-evident that without a finding upon that question the court was powerless to make any other finding. The court clearly recognized this and we find the statement made in the opinion of the court that, "the sole question at issue in the case, therefore, is whether or not the complainants are the legally constituted order and officers of the Knights of Labor (Incorporated)." It is manifest that if the complainants are not such officers they have no standing in court. Both sets of parties claim to be such general officers of the corporation and both claim to have been elected at the same convention. The defendants, claiming to be such officers, were in possession of the property of the corporation, and the complainants were compelled to show and prove that they were entitled to the offices before they could claim the possession of the property and ask that the defendants be enjoined from interference with the rights of the complainants to administer the affairs of the corporation. Approach the case from any and every standpoint it will always be found that the question which must be first determined is the single, naked question of the title to the offices. We agree with counsel and court that the question of questions is the title to the offices, and until that is decided in favor of the complainants no relief of any nature can be granted them. The defendants were in possession of their respective offices in the corporation, which was a private one, organized under and by virtue of an act of Congress, and the presumption was that they had been legally elected, and consequently they could only be legally ousted by proceedings brought in proper form. Both the common law and the Code of the District of Columbia clearly point out the legal course to be pursued in determining the title to an office in a corporation such as is the one in question. We apprehend that quo warranto is that remedy. Equity is not the remedy. The adjudicated cases are quite unanimous. They speak with no uncertain sound, and such cases as may seem to depart from the rule will be found to be based upon some exceptional fact, such, for example, as when the title to the office is a mere incident of the case and not the main or sole question, as it is in the case at bar.

Referring to only two or three of the many cases similar to the one under consideration we find the law seemingly well settled. In Bedford Springs Co. v. McNeen, 161 Pa. St. 639, which was a suit in equity where the relief sought was substantially the same as these complainants ask, we find the court affirming a judgment dismissing the bill, upon the ground that the complainant had mistaken its remedy. The court said: "While it is true that the bill in this case was brought to compel the delivery of the property of the company, yet the real controversy as set forth in the bill and answer is upon the validity of the election of the defendants as directors of the company. If they were lawfully elected, the plaintiff has no case and is not entitled to the property claimed. Their title to the office of directors is therefore the real question at issue. All the averments of the bill tend to this one subject. Another election of other persons is asserted to have been the only lawful election, and the election of the defendants is alleged to have been unlawful. Thus the title of the one set of directors or of the other forms the matter of contention, and the right to have possession of the property in question is only incident to the right to the office." See, also, Commonwealth v. Graham, 64 Pa. St. 339; Gilroy's Appeal, 100 Pa. St. 5. In the latter case the court said: "It is perfectly clear that such a question" (title to office) "can not be tried by such a proceeding" (by bill in equity.) "The statutory remedy is not only adequate but it is exclusive." There is a statutory remedy applicable to this case, which is brought in the District of Columbia, the place of incorporation and the home of the corporation, control of which is sought in this proceeding. The suit was brought after the Code went into effect. Section 1538 of the Code provides that the remedy in this class of cases is by quo warranto. It says: "A quo warranto may be issued from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in the name of the United States—first, against a person who usurps, intrudes into, or unlawfully holds or exercises within the District . . . an office in any domestic corporation."

In New England Life Insurance Co. v. Phillips, 141 Mass. 535, which was an equitable proceeding, the court, in referring to a subject the same as now under consideration, said: "Appreciating the difficulty of maintaining a bill in equity for the purpose of directly determining a contested election, the plaintiff contends, in the first place, that the court being possessed of the cause for the purpose of correcting and restraining a violation of a trust, may proceed to enjoin the directors who hold under and in consequence of such violation of trust. The learning of counsel has not furnished us with any instance of such an application of the equitable doctrine invoked in aid of the jurisdiction, and, after some research, we have been unable to find any. This course is open to the objection that suits to remove or to institute corporation officers do not belong to the original jurisdiction of chancery, and the right to be such officers can not, in general and in the absence of special legislation affording this remedy, be tested by means of an injunction."

The cases cited by complainants' counsel do not seem in point. Walker v. Johnson, 17 App. D. C. 144: 28 Washington Law Reporter, 768, was an appeal from a decree granting a preliminary injunction restraining, pendente lite, the holding of a corporation election. It is not an authority in any view that a bill in equity is the proper proceeding to try the question of title to an office. Goulding v. Standish, 182 Mass. 401, is not an authority that title to an office in an incorporated domestic corporation can be tried in equity. In that case the plaintiffs and defendants and their associates were members of a voluntary association. The plaintiffs, and their associates, remained members of the association, while the defendants, and their associates, had refused to comply with the laws of the association and had withdrawn from it and organized a new association. The relief sought was to restrain the defendants from removing or interfering with the property of the old association and for its delivery to the plaintiffs. No question of the title to any office was involved. It was a contest between two independent associations. Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 669, does not sustain the plaintiffs' contention. The main question there decided was not that of title to office. Such question at best was an incident in the litigation. The main questions presented were as to the jurisdiction of the circuit court, and to the character and extent of the jurisdiction vested in those voluntary associations sometimes called ecclesiastical courts, and how far they are independent of the civil courts. The controversy was over church property, and the defendants were enjoined from using or controlling the church edifice and property, and from hindering or preventing any one from worshiping in the church or participating in any of its religious exercises according to the usages of the church. It was a peculiar case and the court recognized it as such, and we are unable to find in it any authority for holding that the title to an office in a domestic corporation, where that is the main or sole question to be decided, can be determined by a suit in equity rather than by the common law and statutory remedy of quo warranto.

As we have said, the decisions of the courts are quite in unison in holding the proper remedy to determine the question of title to office to be quo warranto.

It appearing that the title to office in a regularly incorporated domestic corporation is the sole or main question at issue herein, as shown by the pleadings, the admission of counsel appearing in the record, and by the opinion of the trial court; that the defendants were in possession under a claim of election, and that the only standing the complainants had was by virtue of a claimed election, we are of the opinion that the court was without jurisdiction to try the question in this action, and that it should have dismissed the bill and left complainants to determine the question by quo warranto, as provided by the Code of the District of Columbia, and as warranted by common law. Thus holding it would be improper for us to express any opinion upon the second alleged ground of error.

From these views it follows that the decree of the court below must be and it is reversed, with costs; and the cause will be remanded to the Supreme Court of the District with direction to dismiss the bill of complaint. And it is so ordered. Reversed.

THIS WEEK'S DECISIONS BY THE COURT OF APPEALS.

Action for Death by Wrongful Act; Contributory Negligence of Decedent.

In Georgetown and Tenallytown Railway Co. v. Smith, the appeal was from a judgment of the trial court in an action for negligently causing the death of plaintiff's intestate. It appeared from the evidence that at the point of the accident the space between two large cars alongside each other was less than three inches, and when the cars were in motion they were liable to come into contact with each other. The decedent was a passenger on one of the cars, and was sitting with his arm resting on the hand rail of the car and projecting over it. In some way he was caught between the cars and pulled from the one in which he was riding, and received injuries which caused his death. A motion by the defendant to direct a verdict on the ground that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence was denied by the trial court, and the jury returned a verdict for $9,000 in favor of the plaintiff, upon which there was judgment. The Court of Appeals affirms the judgment in an opinion by Mr. Justice Duell, holding that the questions of negligence were properly submitted to the jury. Several interesting questions in the law of contributory negligence are raised by the assignments of error, and decided adversely to the contention of the appellant.

Specific Performance; Adequate Remedy at Law.

In Hazelton v. Miller the appeal was from a decree dismissing a bill for specific performance. The bill alleged the making of a contract whereby defendant agreed to sell certain real estate to complainant for $9,000, and that thereafter complainant entered into a binding contract to sell the property to the United States for $14,395.50. It also alleged the refusal of the defendant to perform his contract. The Court of Appeals affirmed the decree of dismissal, holding that there was a want of jurisdiction in equity, the complainant having an adequate remedy at law in an action to recover the difference between the price at which the defendant agreed to sell and that at which the United States had agreed to purchase the property from the complainant. The opinion is by Mr. Chief Justice Shepard.

Bill of Review; Trusts; Perpetuities.

In Landrum et al. v. Jordan the appeal was from a decree of the court upon a bill of review. It appeared that a testator, by one item of his will, devised certain real estate in this District to trustees, the trust to continue until 1928. By a separate item he directed that the rents from one of the pieces of property be paid over to a niece during her life, and directed that should they be less than $40 per month the trustees should add thereto sufficient to make that sum. In a proceeding to construe the will its provisions, so far as they affected lands in this District, were decreed void as creating a perpetuity, and it was declared that as to them the testator died intestate. Upon a bill of review filed by the niece, it was held that this decree was erroneous in as far as the provision for her benefit was concerned, the trust for her benefit being declared separate and independent of the other provisions and not affected by their invalidity; and that the provision in her favor created a valid incumbrance or rent charge primarily against the said premises, and, secondarily, against the entire estate of the testator for any balance the rents of the premises might not yield. Mr. Chief Justice Shepard delivered the opinion of the court, which affirms the decree of the court below.

Husband and Wife; Alimony; Counsel Fees.

In Sparks v. Sparks, the opinion of the court is by Mr. Justice Duell. Two separate appeals were taken—one from an order of the court below, in a suit by a wife against her husband for maintenance, directing the payment of alimony pendente lite, and the other from an order directing the appellant to provide the funds necessary to enable the wife to defend the appeal from the first order. Both orders are affirmed by the Court of Appeals, in a very readable opinion.

Contracts; Statute of Limitations.

In Boogher v. Roach et al., the action was in assumpsit to recover upon an implied contract for services rendered as "genealogist, examiner, and conveyancer" in connection with the estate of Abraham Young. The trial court held that any claim the plaintiff might have was barred by the statute of limitations, and directed a verdict for the defendants, upon which there was judgment. Its action is affirmed in an opinion by Mr. Justice Morris.

Telegraph Company; Messenger Service; Loss of Money.

In White v. Postal Telegraph Cable Company, the plaintiff sought to recover from the defendant company $75, alleged to have been lost by a messenger in its employ, to whom it was entrusted by a firm of real estate brokers, upon an order from plaintiff's attorneys. The trial court directed a verdict for defendant, and the Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Duell, affirms the judgment. The liability of the defendant company as a common carrier is considered in the opinion.

Electric Railways; Judgment for Personal Injuries Affirmed.

In McDermott, receiver of City and Suburban Railway, v. Severe, the action was for personal injuries received by the appellee, a boy of — years. While his foot was caught in a space between the rail and the planking at a suburban crossing, the plaintiff was run down by one of defendants' cars and his leg cut off. The verdict was in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $15,000—one of the largest ever given in this District in an action for personal injuries. The Court of Appeals affirms the judgment in an opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Shepard.

Direction of Verdict for Plaintiff Affirmed.

In Whipple v. Geddes, the plaintiff sued to recover the balance of the purchase price of a piece of real estate. The trial court directed a judgment for the plaintiff, and its ruling is affirmed in an opinion by Mr. Justice Duell.

Accounting by Trustee; Compensation of Trustee.

In the case of Mayfield v. McCurdy, the suit was for an accounting by the trustee under a will, and to compel distribution of funds in the hands of the trustees. The appellant objected to the decree of the court below in respect of the compensation to which the trustee was held entitled, and to the provision made for its payment; and also to the refusal of the court below to direct the distribution of the funds in their hands arising from the sale of certain real estate until after the death or remarriage of the widow of the testator. The Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Morris, affirms the decree of the court below.

Judgment for Claimant on Trial of Right of Property Affirmed.

In Brown v. Petersen, the appeal was from a judgment for the claimant on a trial of a right of property in chattels levied on under an execution issued upon a judgment of a justice of the peace. The claimant had a lien on the chattels for rent, and they were in his possession at the time of the levy. The court, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Morris, affirms the judgment of the trial court, in which a verdict for the claimant was returned by direction of the court.

Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

JAMES C. LEONARD ET AL., APPELLANTS,
v.
ABNER-DRURY BREWING COMPANY ET AL.

CONSPIRACY IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE; JURISDICTION OF EQUITY TO ENJOIN; ANTI-TRUST ACT.

A bill in equity for an injunction alleged the formation by four brewing companies of a combination known as the brewers' association, in order to prevent competition in the manufacture and sale of brewed and malt liquors, to control the disposition of the same to retail dealers, and to prevent competition in price; that by the agreement between them no one of said companies could sell its product at a price fixed by itself, nor below a price fixed by the association, and no one of them was allowed to sell beer to customers allotted to another; that in order to raise the price of beer to $6 per barrel said companies entered into a conspiracy to suppress the competition of the H. company, which had declined to enter the association and was selling beer to complainants and other retail dealers at $5.60 per barrel; that to compel said H. company to enter said combine, the said association had conspired with certain officers of a labor union from among whose members the H. company procured employees to carry on its operations, to cause said workmen to leave the service of the H. company unless it agreed to enter said association; that intimidated by these threats the H. company was about to yield to their demands and join said combine, and would do so unless enjoined; that complainants had for a long time been purchasing beer from the H. company at $3.60 per barrel and selling the same at retail, and had built up a profitable business; that should the H. company be compelled to enter said combine the price of beer would be increased to $6 per barrel, and another probable result would be that complainants would be assigned as customers to some other of the companies in said association and be unable to purchase beer from the H. company even at the advanced price—the immediate and direct effect of either act, and especially of both combined, being to deprive complainants of many regular customers and diminish their profits, to their irreparable loss and injury. Held—

1. That the allegations of the bill showed that the so-called brewers' association was a trust or combine within section 3 of the "Anti-Trust Act" (26 Stat. 209), and the coercion practiced upon the H. company to compel it to enter the trust and obey its regulations of the advance in prices and the arbitrary division of customers is a palpable invasion of private right, as well as inimical to the interests of the public.
2. That the court could not, at the suit of complainants, decree the agreement between the members of the brewers' association null and void—complainants' interest in respect of that not being different from that of the general public, whose interests can be protected only by a suit by the United States.
3. That the attempted invasion of the rights of the H. company could not be stayed at the suit of complainants unless they can show irreparable injury will be done to themselves as the direct consequence of such invasion.
4. That the allegations of the bill show a case of legal injury which would result directly to complainants from the forcible and wrongful termination of their trade relations with the H. company, to prevent which equity would enjoin the doing or continuance of the wrongful acts.
5. That the purposes and practices of the alleged combination or conspiracy are equally violative of the common law which prevails in this District, and of which section 3 of the "Anti-Trust Act" is declaratory; and independant of the statute any person may invoke the jurisdiction of equity to prevent an irreparable injury through such conspiracy.
6. Whether, if the wrongs complained of should be remediless save by a resort to the "Anti-Trust Act," any party other than the United States can invoke the jurisdiction of equity to restrain their commission, quære.

No. 1474. Decided March 7, 1905.

APPEAL by complainants from a decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in Equity, No. 24,803, dismissing a bill for an injunction. Reversed.

Mr. Wm. G. Johnson for the appellants.

Mr. A. A. Birney, Mr. H. F. Woodard, Mr. L. A. Bailey, Mr. Charles W. Darr, Mr. Alex. H. Bell, and Mr. M. J. Colbert for the appellees.

Mr. Chief Justice SHEPARD delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is an appeal from a decree sustaining a demurrer to and dismissing a bill for injunction. The bill was filed July 21, 1904, by Leonard and Stewart, retail liquor dealers in the District of Columbia, on their own behalf and on behalf of others similarly engaged who may wish to intervene. The defendants are The Abner-Drury Company, a corporation organized under the laws of West Virginia; The National Capital Brewing Company, a corporation of Virginia; The Arlington Brewing Company, a corporation of Virginia; The Washington Brewery Company, a corporation of New York; The Chr. Heurich Brewing Company, a corporation of Virginia; the managers of said corporations, respectively, and Louis S. Crown, Michael Cockery, and Timothy Healy. It is averred that all of said corporations, save the Arlington company, have their breweries and general offices in District of Columbia; that the Arlington company brews its beer in the State of Virginia but maintains an office and agency for the sale and distribution of its product in the District of Columbia. Defendants Crown and Cockery, residents of the District, are charged as members and officers of an unincorporated association known as Local No. 63, of the International Brotherhood of Stationary Firemen; and Healy, a non-resident, as president of said International Brotherhood.

It is averred that the five brewing companies are engaged in manufacturing or brewing malt liquors, and dispose of the bulk of their product, which amounts annually to about two hundred and seventy thousand barrels, in the District of Columbia; and that the retail dealers thereof are dependent upon them for the bulk of their stock in trade; that the said brewing companies, excepting the Heurich company, have confederated and conspired together in a brewers' association, or under a name of similar import, in order to prevent competition in the manufacture and sale of brewed or malt liquors, to control the disposition of the same to the retail liquor dealers, and to prevent competition in the price of the same; that by the terms of the confederation and agreement aforesaid, no one of said brewing companies shall sell its product at a price to be fixed by itself, nor below an arbitrary price to be fixed by the associators; and, further, the business of selling beer is to be allotted among them, and no one is to sell to the customers allotted to another; that for more than a year a certain grade of "light" beer has been sold to retail dealers at $4 per barrel with a discount of 10 per cent for cash, making $3.60 per barrel; that prior to said time the price for said beer had been $6 with a discount of 5 per cent for cash, making $5.70 per barrel; that the reduction had been caused by the Heurich company, which had never entered into any agreement with other brewers, and has until this date refused to do so, and that by reason of the reduction in price by the Heurich company the other companies were compelled to reduce the price of their beer to the same figure in order to meet the competition of the Heurich company; that in order to raise the price of beer to that of $6 per barrel the four companies aforesaid entered into a conspiracy to suppress the competition of the Heurich company, and to effectuate the same conspired together to compel the Heurich company to join the association aforesaid, and to abide by and observe the prices fixed thereby, as well as the distribution or allotment to be made among consumers and customers; that the Heurich company in the manufacture of beer is compelled to employ firemen who are members of said Local No. 63 of the International Brotherhood of Stationary Firemen; that in order to aid in the accomplishment of the purposes of the conspiracy, the said four companies agreed with Crown and Healy to induce the firemen employed by the Heurich company to break their contract of employment, unless the latter would agree to enter said association, submit to its regulations raising the price of beer and allotting a division of customers; that in pursuit of the objects of the said conspiracy, the said defendants composing the Brewers' Association procured the said defendant Crown to address a communi cation to the Heurich company notifying it that its contract with its firemen would be terminated on July 1, and that the firemen would not be permitted to work for it unless it joined the said association and submitted to its rules and exactions; that further, to effect the object aforesaid, said defendants composing said association caused the defendant Healy, in his character as president of the brotherhood aforesaid, to seek a conference with the defendant Heurich company, ostensibly to adjust a contract between said defendant and its firemen for the ensuing year, but in reality to compel said defendant to agree to enter said association and submit to its rules and regulations. Further allegations of the bill are quoted as follows:

"That at the said conference said Healy in the presence of the defendant Edward F. Abner, representing the Abner-Drury Brewing Company and acting for it in that behalf, and of Albert Carry representing the defendant The National Capital Brewing Company and acting for it in that behalf, and of the defendant Bernard Katz representing the Arlington Brewing Company and acting for it in that behalf, informed the representative of the defendant The Chr. Heurich Brewing Company that unless the said last named defendant should agree to confer with the representatives of the other four brewing companies representing the Brewers' Association aforesaid and join said association and submit to its rules and exactions, particularly its requirement that the said Chr. Heurich Brewing Company should raise the price of its light beer to its customers to $6 per barrel, and sell only to such customers as the said association might allot to it, he, the said Healy, in his character as president of the International Brotherhood of Stationary Firemen, would not confer with said Chr. Heurich Brewing Company in respect to a contract between it and the said Local No. 63 of the International Brotherhood of Stationary Firemen, nor permit its members to enter into the employment of said Chr. Heurich Brewing Company to serve the said defendant in the prosecution of its business. The said Healy then and there in the presence of the defendant Edward F. Abner, representing the Abner-Drury Brewing Company and acting for it in that behalf, and of Albert Carry representing the defendant The National Capital Brewing Company and acting for it in that behalf, and of the defendant Bernard Katz representing the Arlington Brewing Company and acting for it in that behalf, further informed the representative of the defendant, The Chr. Heurich Brewing Company that the said meeting was called for the purpose of compelling the defendant The Chr. Heurich Brewing Company to join said association composed of the other four defendant brewing corporations, and to raise the price of light beer to the retail liquor dealers to $6 per barrel, and to sell its beer only to such of the retail liquor dealers in the District as the association might authorize it to sell the same; and that in the event of the said defendant The Chr. Heurich Brewing Company refusing to submit to its demand, other workmen in the employ of said defendant The Chr. Brewing Company would be required to quit work, and that the product of said brewery would, through the influence of said Healy, be boycotted, meaning and intending thereby that he, the said Healy, had the power and means and would use the same to interfere with and prevent the sale of the product of said Chr. Heurich Brewing Company to these complainants and other retail liquor dealers and to general consumers of beer within the District, unless the said defendant complied with the said demands.

"11. The complainants further show that they are and have for some years past been engaged in the purchase and sale of the product of the defendant The Chr. Heurich Brewing Company, and have a large demand for the same in their business; that if the said defendant The Chr. Heurich Brewing Company shall yield to the demands of the other defendants and increase the price of the beer to $6 per barrel the said increase of price will involve great loss and irreparable injury to these complainants and other retail liquor dealers similarly situated, and that if the demands of said Healy and the said four defendant corporations composing said Brewers' Association are complied with by the defendant The Chr. Heurich Brewing Company, these complainants and other retail liquor dealers will be prevented from purchasing and selling the product of the defendant The Chr. Heurich Brewing Company to their irreparable loss and injury, and the deprivation of their customers, who are accustomed to purchase the said product from these complainants and others selling the same.

"12. Your complainants are further informed and believe and therefore charge, that no disagreement or controversy has arisen between the defendant The Chr. Heurich Brewing Company and any of its employees; that no change in the services, hours of labor, or wages of the firemen employed by it is sought or desired by said firemen, and that the purpose of the defendant Healy and the defendant Crown, in advising and commanding the said firemen to cease their employment with the said defendant The Chr. Heurich Brewing Company, as hereinafter set forth, is to embarrass said last named defendant in its business, and compel it to abandon its competition in trade and its sale of its product at the price now charged by it to all consumers, and to compel it to increase the price to the sum of $6 per barrel, and to limit the sale thereof to certain specified purchasers instead of extending the same to these complainants and all other retail liquor dealers.

"13. Your complainants are further advised and therefore charge that the purpose and object of the conspiracy entered into among the said defendants The Abner-Drury Brewing Company, The National Capital Brewing Company, The Arlington Brewing Company, The Washington Brewery Company, and the said Crown and Healy, by causing a strike or refusal to work among the employes of the defendant The Chr. Heurich Brewing Company, is to stifle competition in the brewing business and to restrain the conduct of trade in violation of the rights of these complainants and of other retail liquor dealers and of the general public, and in violation of the law of the land. And they are further advised and believe, and therefore charge, that the said design and purpose of the said defendants is contrary to public policy and good morals, and such as a court of equity can and ought to restrain by injunction against said defendants.

"14. Your complainants are informed and believe, and therefore charge that the said defendant Healy, in furtherance of the conspiracy entered into by him and the defendant Crown and the four defendant brewing corporations composing the Brewers' Association aforesaid, has actually ordered the firemen employed by the defendant The Chr. Heurich Brewing Company to quit the service of said defendant and to refuse further to perform their contract of employment with it at 12 o'clock noon on the 21st day of July, 1904, unless said defendant The Chr. Heurich Brewing Company shall submit to the demands of said conspirators and enter into said Brewers' Association and abide by and be governed by its rules and exactions and agree to raise the price of light beer to $6 per barrel, and to sell the same only to such persons as the said association shall prescribe.

"15. Your complainants are further informed and believe that the said defendant The Chr. Heurich Brewing Company is considering the said threats and demands of the said defendants, and may by reason of the threatened injury to its business yield to the demands of said defendant and enter said association, and as a consequence thereof increase the price of its beer to $6 per barrel and submit to the restrictions of the said association as to the persons to whom the same may be sold.

"16. Your complainants are advised and believe and therefore charge that the said agreement and confederation between the said defendant corporations composing the Brewers' Association is an unlawful agreement in restraint of trade, designed to prevent competition in business and to restrict the persons to whom the products of breweries may be sold, and that the said defendants can not lawfully maintain said association or enforce its rules, and that it will be unlawful for the defendant The Chr. Heurich Brewing Company to enter into said agreement and confederation or to abide by and observe its rules and restrictions.

The prayers of the bill are: 1. That the association agreement be declared null and void. 2. That defendants, their agents, etc., be perpetually enjoined from attempting to coerce the Heurich company into joining said association or entering into the terms of said agreement. 3. That the defendants, composing the association, their agents, etc., be perpetually enjoined from inviting, soliciting or demanding that the Heurich company shall increase the price of its product to complainants, to any other retail dealers, or to any persons whomsoever, or directly or indirectly counseling or advising such action. 4. That the defendants composing the brewing association, their agents, etc., and the defendants Crown and Healy be perpetually enjoined from commanding, counseling, advising, or by any means inducing the firemen or other employees of the Heurich company to quit the service of the same, or from in any manner attempting to regulate the price at which said company shall sell any of its product, or the person or persons to whom it may sell the same. 5. That the Heurich company be perpetually enjoined from entering into the confederation known as the Brewers' Association, or from entering into any combination or agreement with the defendant companies, or any of them, for the purpose of regulating the price at which the product of any of said corporations shall be sold, or the persons to whom the product of any of said companies shall be sold; or from in any manner attempting to restrict or restrain the competition between the several brewing companies in the prosecution of their business of manufacturing and selling the product of their breweries. The Abner-Drury Brewing Company, and Harry Williams, the representative of the Washington Brewery Company, appeared and filed demurrers to the bill, which were sustained. It does not appear from the record that any of the other defendants entered their appearance. The Abner-Drury Brewing Company and the Arlington Brewing Company have, however, appeared by counsel in this court and been heard in support of the decree appealed from.

1. As it is charged in the bill, the combination between the several defendants composing the Brewers' Association is, without doubt, a trust or conspiracy in restraint of trade within the third section of the "anti-trust act" of Congress (26 Stat. 209), and the coercion attempted to be practiced upon the Heurich company to compel it to enter the trust and obey its regulations of the advance of prices and the arbitrary division of customers is a palpable invasion of private right, as well as inimical to the interests of the public. Montague v. Lowry, 193 U. S. 38, 47; Addyston Pipe and Steel Co. v. U. S., 175 U. S. 211, 244; U. S. v. Freight Asso., 166 U. S. 290, 322, 323. The purposes and practices of the combination or conspiracy, as alleged, are equally violative of the common law which prevails in the District of Columbia, and of which the third section of the statute is declaratory. Northern Securities Co. v. U. S., 193 U. S. 197, 339; Morris River Coal Co. v. Barclay Coal Co., 68 Pa. St. 173; Nester v. Continental Brewing Co., 161 Pa. St. 473; Croft v. McConoughey, 79 Ill. 346; Richardson v. Buhl, 77 Mich. 632; Arnot v. Pittston, etc., Coal Co., 68 N. Y. 558; Jackson v. Stanfield, 137 Ind. 592; Gatzow v. Buening, 106 Wis. 1, 14. The decisions of the highest courts of many other States are to the same effect.

2. The serious question for determination on this appeal is the right of the complainants to the equitable remedy of injunction to prevent the execution of the objects of the unlawful conspiracy. It is clear that they are not entitled to the relief asked in the first prayer of the bill, namely, that the agreement between the four members of the Brewers' Association be declared null and void. In respect of that agreement, merely, the concern of the complainants is not different from that of the general public, whose interest can be protected in no other way than by a suit in the name of the United States. Nor can the attempted invasion of the rights of the Heurich Brewing Company by the immediate parties to that agreement, no matter how flagrant, be stayed at the suit of the complainants unless they can show that an irreparable injury will be done to themselves as the direct consequence of such invasion.

Their ground of complaint does not rest upon a contract with the Heurich company which the latter is about to break, in obedience to the unlawful demands of the members of the trust and the compulsion exercised by them and their confederates. If such were the case, and that contract should be broken through the malicious interference of the defendants, the complainants might maintain an action against them for the damages occasioned thereby. Angle v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 151 U. S. 1, 13. They could certainly maintain an action against the Heurich company for such breach, and they might possibly maintain one against all of the defendants, including that company, for threefold damages under the provisions of section 7 of the "Anti-Trust Act." Possibly, also, they might, under certain conditions, obtain an injunction against the Heurich company to prevent such breach.

Having no enforceable contract with the Heurich company, however, their right to any remedy depends entirely upon the condition that they have shown a case of legal injury which would directly result from the forcible and wrongful termination of their established trade relations with the Heurich company. Their allegations are in substance: That they have an established and profitable business in the sale of light beer of the Heurich company's manufacture; that they have been regularly purchasing such beer from the Heurich company at the price of $3.60 per barrel and retailing it for a long period of time, during which they have established a lucrative trade and custom; that the Heurich company is unwilling to advance the price of beer to the proposed trust rate, and wishes to continue its sales to complainants at the present price; that, intimidated by the threats of the defendants and their malicious and oppressive acts, the Heurich company is about to yield to their demands, and will probably do so unless restrained; that the immediate and direct effect of such surrender will be an advance in the price of said beer to $5.70 per barrel; that another and probable effect will be that complainants will be assigned as customers to some other member of the trust, against their will, and be unable to purchase the beer of the Heurich company at even the advanced price; that the immediate and direct effect of either act, and particularly of both combined, will be to deprive complainants of many of their regular customers, and diminish their receipts and profits to their irreparable loss and injury.

In the event of the execution of the conspiracy these conditions would entitle them to an action for such damages as they would be permitted to prove at law, with threefold recovery under the statute. Montague v. Lowry, 193 U. S. 38. But damages for acts which might work commercial ruin are not always recoverable at law, the rules of which, relating to the measure of damages, do not ordinarily warrant the assessment of consequential damages of an uncertain or speculative character, such as loss of trade and profits, and the failure of credit and business. For such injuries the remedy at law, even under the statute giving a threefold recovery, is inadequate and incomplete. In such cases, then, the jurisdiction of equity attaches, and to accomplish the ends of justice the writ of injunction will issue to prevent the doing or the continuance of the wrongful acts. Watson v. Sutherland, 5 Wall. 74, 79; North v. Peters, 138 U. S. 271, 281; see, also, Vance v. Vandercook, 170 U. S. 468, 480.

3. The contention of the appellees, that the exclusive right to equitable relief against the execution of conspiracies in restraint of trade is in the United States under the provisions of the "Anti-trust Act," has not been seriously contested by the appellants who claim the right independently of the statute. This, as we have seen, but declares the rule of the common law then and now in force in the District of Columbia, under which any person may invoke the jurisdiction of equity to prevent an irreparable injury through such conspiracy. Jackson v. Stanfield, 137 Ind. 592; Hagar v. Blindell, 18 U. S. App. 354, 359. That the statute makes a conspiracy in restraint of trade a crime, and provides a severe penalty therefor, does not necessarily impair the ordinary jurisdiction of equity where the criminal acts work irreparable injury to property. In re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 593.

And whatever may be the rule of its enforcement generally, neither by express terms nor necessary implication does it undertake to completely substitute its remedies for all others which any person might have had before its enactment.

As the complainant's right to a remedy in equity can be maintained without regard to the act of Congress, it is not essential to determine whether, if the wrongs complained of would be remediless save by resort to that act, any party, other than the United States, can invoke the jurisdiction of equity to restrain their commission. At the same time we are not to be understood as admitting the defendant's contention on this point. The decisions supporting that contention have all been in cases under the sections of the act relating to conspiracies in restraint of interstate commerce, in jurisdictions where the power of Congress is limited to that end, and where the jurisdiction of equity, it seems, was not invoked on the ground of special and irreparable injury to the complainant. Met. T. Co. v. R. R. Exp. Co., 108 Fed. Rep. 909, 912, and cases cited; G. C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Miami S. S. Co., 86 Fed. Rep. 407.

Moreover, conspiracies in restraint of trade in the District of Columbia are determinable under the third section of the act wherein, in the exercise of its plenary power of legislation, the Congress has enacted that: "Every contract, combination in form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce in any territory of the United States or the District of Columbia . . . is hereby declared illegal." . . . The same section then declares the making of such contracts or the engagement in any such combination or conspiracy, a misdemeanor and provides a penalty. With the suggestion of these possible distinctions the question remains an open one.

4. The defendants Crown and Healy are not charged with an independent attempt to raise or fix the wages of the employees of the Heurich Brewing Company, and the rights of persons so engaged are not involved. The charge against them is that they have combined and confederated with the defendants composing the Brewers' Association for the sole purpose of aiding in the conspiracy to compel the Heurich company to join that association in order that its regulations looking to the advance of the price of beer and the allotment of customers to the several brewing companies may be enforced.

They are, therefore, equally within the scope of the remedy sought to prevent the irreparable injury of the complainants through the execution of the objects of the conspiracy entered into by their codefendants.

For the reasons given, we are of the opinion that the learned justice presiding in the Equity Court erred in sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the bill. If the testimony shall sustain the allegations of the bill substantially in the particulars before summarized, the complainants will be entitled to a decree granting the injunction prayed for, limiting the same, however, to such acts as have relation to the particular injuries sought to be done them. The dissolution of the trust agreement between the members of the Brewers' Association and the restraint of action injurious to the general public, can only be had at the suit of the United States.

The decree must be reversed with costs to be taxed against the Washington Brewery Company and Harry Williams who entered the demurrer to the bill, and also against the Abner-Drury Brewing Company, the Arlington Brewing Company, and the National Capital Brewing Company, who have entered their appearance in this court in support of the decree appealed from. The cause will be remanded for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion. It is so ordered.

Reversed.

ADA V. BYRNE, APPELLANT,

v.

ROBERT M. MORRISON.

LANDLORD AND TENANT; NOTICE TO QUIT; ARREST OF JUDGMENT; OBJECTION NOT RAISED BELOW; EXECUTION; ENTRY OF APPEAL.

1. A notice to quit served by the landlord upon the tenant full thirty days before the end of the term, as required by section 1219, Code D. C., is not insufficient because it fails to specify the date of the termination of the lease.
2. The receipt by a landlord of rent for the current month pending a notice to quit is not a waiver of his right to demand possession under that notice.
3. A motion in arrest of judgment on the ground that the verdict of the jury in the trial of an appeal from a justice of the peace in a landlord and tenant proceeding was for "intervening rent and damages," instead of for intervening damages for the leased property and compensation for use and occupation thereof, as provided in section 1233, Code D. C., held properly denied, the recital in the verdict being an unnecessary one, and the form of the verdict not having been called to the attention of the court before the jury were discharged.
4. An objection that an action was prematurely brought, not made in the trial court but urged for the first time on appeal, will not be considered.
5. Under section 1074, Code D. C., a writ of execution may be issued immediately on the rendition of a judgment, unless suspended by agreement or by an injunction or by an appeal operating as a supersedeas, and the entry of notice of appeal will have no effect whatever.
6. Where a writ of possession issued March 28 was served the same day and on April 1 defendant gave notice of appeal, but filed no bond until April 12, on which last date a motion was made to quash the writ of possession, held that the motion was properly denied.

No. 1442. Decided February 8, 1905.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at Law, No. 46,657, on appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace in a landlord and tenant proceeding. Affirmed.

Mr. J. W. Bevans, Mr. J. S. McDonough, Mr. F. J. Hogan, Miss Florence A. Colford, Miss Fannie B. Clark, Miss Ethel M. Colford, and Mr. R. B. Cavanaugh for the appellant.

Mr. John E. Laskey and Mr. R. C. Thompson for the appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice SHEPARD delivered the opinion of the court:

1. Robert M. Morrison, claiming the right of possession of premises 503 B street S. E., in the city of Washington, filed his complaint in the justice's court under section 20, Code D. C., on November 25, 1903, to recover possession of said premises of Ada V. Byrne. It was alleged that defendant had heretofore occupied the premises as complainant's tenant from month to month, and that her tenancy had been determined by the service of notice to quit of thirty days. Judgment for possession was rendered December 5, 1903. Defendant appealed therefrom to the Supreme Court of the District. On trial therein, March 14, 1904, verdict was returned in favor of complainant for possession and for "eighty dollars intervening rent and damages."

Defendant filed a motion in arrest of judgment on the following grounds: First. The verdict was for rent, and not for intervening damages to the leased property and compensation for the use and occupation thereof as provided for such cases by section 1233, Code. Second. Because the verdict erroneously embraced rent beyond its date, or up to March 25, 1904. Third. Because the verdict was for rent prior to the judgment appealed from. Other grounds are substantially the same as the foregoing. This motion was overruled and judgment was entered on March 25, 1904, from which the defendant has appealed.

It appears from the bill of exceptions that complainant served defendant with the notice to quit on October 24, 1903. Complainant then offered the lease the substance of which is given. It showed that defendant occupied the premises as his tenant from month to month at $20 per month payable in advance and that the month expired on the 25th day of November. Objection was made to the proof of the notice because insufficient under the Code; overruled and exception taken. Defendant then read in evidence a receipt executed by the complainant on October 27, 1903, for $20 purporting to be for the rent of the premises for the month ending November 25, 1903. She then testified that the receipt was given for rent "up to November 26, 1903." The bill fails to recite any evidence relating to damages to the premises or the value of the intervening occupation, nor does it purport to recite all of the evidence upon which the case was tried.

2. We perceive no substantial objection to the notice to quit. It does not specify the day of the termination of the lease, a fact not required, and one presumably as well known to the defendant as to the complainant. It was dated October 23, 1903, and served the full thirty days before the end of the term as required. Code, sec. 1219.

3. It is true that the receipt of rent by a landlord, after notice to quit, of rent for a new term or part thereof amounts to a waiver of his right to demand possession under that notice. 2 Taylor, L. & T. sec. 435; Collins v. Canty, 6 Cush. 415; Croft v. Lumley, 5 Ell. & B. 648, 680; S. C. E. B. & E. 1069.

But the receipt of rent for the current month pending the notice to quit can not have that effect, and that was all that was done in this instance. The written receipt recites that it is for rent for the month ending November 25, 1903, which is the date of expiration named in the lease.

4. Section 1233 of the Code authorizes judgment where an appeal has been taken from the judgment of the justice of the peace to be entered against the appellant and the surety on his bond for "all intervening damages to the leased property and compensation for the use and occupation thereof from the date of the judgment appealed from to the date of its affirmance." This, of course, does not mean the rent stipulated in the expired contract, but the reasonable value of the use and occupation, together with damage that may have been done to the property.

The recital in the verdict that the sum of $80 was found therein for intervening rent and damages was an unnecessary one. It was not so returned in obedience to any instruction of the court so far as the record shows. It must have been found upon some evidence, but what that evidence was we are not informed by the bill of exceptions. It must be presumed, therefore, that there was proof of intervening damages and value of use and occupation to the full amount found. There is nothing to indicate that the form of the verdict was called to the attention of the court before the jury were discharged, and it is further to be presumed that if it had been it would have been amended. If the jury were directed to find for the plaintiff according to the stipulation of the lease, or the evidence was confined to that and not directed to damages and value of occupation, it was the duty of the defendant to make the proper objection and present it in his bill of exceptions.

5. According to the date given in the bill of exceptions for the expiration of the month, namely, November 25, the complaint was prematurely filed. It was one day before the time, because if the month expired on the 25th the defendant was entitled to possession for the whole of that day. It was suggested on the argument by appellee's counsel that the month expired on November 24, as actually recited in the lease, and had been misrecited in the bill of exceptions. Be that as it may, we must accept the bill of exceptions which can not now be corrected, or at any time in that way.

The point that the suit had been prematurely filed was not made in either of the trial courts. The fact was not called to the attention of either court by plea, motion, or suggestion. The motion in arrest of judgment does not mention it as one of its grounds. It is too late to raise the question for the first time on this the second appeal.

6. It appears that a writ of possession was issued on the judgment below on March 28, 1904, and executed the same day. On April 1, the defendant entered notice of appeal, but filed no bond therefor until April 12. On the last named day she moved to quash the writ of restitution because it could not lawfully issue during the time allowed for perfecting the appeal to this court. This was overruled and exception taken. There was no error. It is declared in section 1074 of the Code that: "Where the right to issue an execution is not suspended by agreement or by an injunction or by an appeal operating as a supersedeas, a writ of execution may be issued immediately on the rendition of the judgment or at any time within three years thereafter." . . . The entry of notice of appeal can have no effect whatever, though, perhaps, the court might, in its discretion and for good cause shown, suspend the execution for a reasonable time after judgment.

Finding no reversible error in the record the judgment will be affirmed with costs. It is so ordered.

Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

GEORGE C. HAZELTON, APPELLANT,

v.

FRANCIS MILLER.

EQUITY; SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE; ADEQUATE REMEDY AT LAW.

Where a bill in equity for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of land alleges that, after the making of the contract by defendant, complainant had entered into a binding contract to sell the property to the United States for a stated sum, a conveyance from the defendant being sought to enable complainant to perform that contract, the bill will be dismissed for want of jurisdiction in equity, there being an adequate remedy at law in an action to recover the difference between the price at which the defendant had agreed to sell and that contracted to be paid complainant by the United States for the property.

No. 1492. Decided April 4, 1905.

APPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in Equity, No. 24,238, dismissing a bill for specific performance. Affirmed.

Mr. Charles C. Cole, Mr. R. Golden Donaldson, and Mr. Heber J. May for the appellant.

Mr. J. J. Darlington for the appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice SHEPARD delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is an appeal from a decree dismissing a bill for specific performance upon a demurrer thereto.

The contract of which performance is sought to be compelled reads as follows:

"For the sum of one dollar and other valuable considerations, I hereby agree and bind myself and my heirs to sell to George C. Hazelton, and to deliver by good and sufficient deed at any time during the present session of Congress, and such additional time as may be necessary for settlement under appropriation by that Congress, part of lot numbered two (2), in square numbered one hundred and forty-three (143), being six thousand, seven hundred and twenty (6,720) feet, more or less, and all the ground owned by me in said square with the improvements thereon, for the sum of nine thousand dollars ($9,000).

"Should the said George C. Hazelton fail to take advantage of and accept this offer as above within the time mentioned, then this agreement shall be null and void.

"Witness my hand this 11th day of December, A. D. 1902.

"(Signed) FRANCIS MILLER."

Having set out the contract the bill proceeds as follows:

"4. A part of the consideration mentioned in said contract moving to the plaintiff from the defendant was services rendered both before and after the making of said contract by the plaintiff in bringing the said property to the attention of the committees of Congress as a suitable and appropriate site for a hall of records. Plaintiff, at the instance of the said defendant, who desired to sell said property at a reasonable price, had expended much time and labor and expended considerable money, prior to the making of that contract and has also subsequent thereto, in calling the attention of the committees of Congress to the eligibility and desirability of the land in said square for the purpose aforesaid, and during the two last sessions of Congress plaintiff devoted a great deal of his time to the ascertainment of the condition of the title, the condition of the land as affording a good foundation, the condition, size, and durability of the sewers in the streets surrounding said square, the kind, character, and condition of the buildings thereon, and other facts tending to show that the said square was a desirable location for said building, and furnishing them to and laying them before the said committees of Congress in order to enable them to act intelligently upon the matter. At the first session of the 57th Congress plaintiff called the attention of the committees of Congress to said location and, at the request of the members of said committees, he ascertained and collated various facts in relation thereto, and subsequently during said session, at the like request of said committees, prepared a bill to be introduced in Congress authorizing the purchase of said square for said purpose, but the bill did not pass at that session. Subsequently at the second session of said Congress he again called the attention of the committees to the said real estate and at their like request collected and furnished them other important information in relation to it, and employed others to aid and assist him in securing such information to demonstrate to said committees the propriety of said purchase. He also, at his own expense, caused many of said facts to be put in print and furnished them to the members of said committees for their information and for the use of other members of Congress when said bill should come up for debate. At several sessions of Congress he appeared before said committees and filed briefs and made arguments, the object and tendency of which were to show that upon all of the facts presented in relation to this and other sites mentioned and discussed, the square above mentioned was better adapted to the purpose of a hall of records than any other in the city. Said committees all the time understood that he was the owner of some of said property and was acting as attorney for other owners of the said real estate. At the second session of said Congress said bill was passed authorizing the purchase or condemnation of said square for the purpose aforesaid and appropriating the sum of four hundred thousand dollars ($400,000), or so much thereof as might be necessary to pay for the same. Said act provided that if the Secretary of the Treasury could by negotiation acquire said square or any part thereof at such figures as might be deemed reasonable, that he might purchase instead of condemning. After the passage of said bill, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the said Miller, the plaintiff commenced negotiations with the proper officers of the Treasury Department to make a sale of said property to the United States and on the — day of Aug. 1903, agreed with said officers upon a price which they were willing to pay for said property rather than to condemn it, which aggregated about fourteen thousand three hundred and ninety-five dollars and fifty cents ($14,395.50), and informed the defendant that such contract had been consummated, but that it would take some time for the Treasury Department to investigate the title and make arrangements for the payment of the money, and the proper Treasury officers are now engaged in such work and the time has not yet arrived when they can properly, under said act of Congress, pay out the money for the real estate hereinbefore mentioned, and the necessary time for settlement under said appropriation has not yet expired.

"5. The plaintiff further shows that after he had informed the defendant had knowledge of the sale which he had made to the United States of said property, the defendant intimated to the plaintiff that he did not intend to keep his contract with him, but to convey the property direct to the United States and demand the right to receive from the United States the full sum of money which the Government has agreed to pay for said lot of land, and denies the right of the plaintiff to the purchase money for which said property has sold in excess of the nine thousand dollars ($9,000)."

It is further alleged that on October 5, 1903, complainant tendered to defendant the said sum of $9,000, and demanded the execution by him and his wife of a conveyance of the title. Among other prayers is one for an injunction restraining the defendant from conveying the property to the United States and receiving any money therefor.

The demurrer raises several questions, only one of which we find it necessary to consider.

The bill was rightly dismissed if for no other reason than a want of jurisdiction in equity.

The essential foundation of the jurisdiction to entertain a bill for the specific performance of a contract is the inadequacy of the remedy at law for its breach. Ordinarily, where the contract is for the conveyance of land, it is assumed that the remedy at law is inadequate and incomplete. But in this case that inference is negatived by the express allegations of the bill. The complainant alleges that he has entered into a binding contract to convey the property to the United States for the agreed sum of $14,395.50, and seeks a conveyance from the defendant, whose solvency is not even denied, for the sole purpose of performing that contract.

Having no other purpose, and having fixed and rendered certain the damages sustained by the breach of the contract, his sole remedy is at law. Further discussion, and the citation of authorities in support of this conclusion are unnecessary.

The decree must be affirmed with costs, and it is so ordered.

Negligence; Distance Between Railroad Tracks; Size of Cars; Liability of District of Columbia.

In Smith v. District of Columbia, the appeal was from a judgment entered upon a verdict directed for the defendant in an action by the administrator of the estate of a decedent to recover compensation for his death, claimed to have resulted from an alleged omission of duty by the District of Columbia. The deceased was a passenger on a street railway car, and while two cars were passing each other his elbow was caught and he was pulled from the car in which he was riding and killed. It appeared the distance between the large cars, then in use, while passing each other at the point of the accident, was about 2½ inches, though the space between the tracks was 3 feet 7 inches. It was sought to hold the District liable on the ground that it was its duty to regulate the manner of the construction and maintenance of railway tracks in the streets of the city, and the selection and operation of the cars used thereon; and because of default in performance of that duty it was liable in damages for the injuries causing the death of plaintiff's intestate. The trial court denied this contention, and directed a verdict for the District, upon which there was judgment; and the ruling is affirmed by the Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Anderson, of the Supreme Court of the District, who sat with the Court of Appeals in the hearing of the case.

Husband and Wife; Divorce; Costs of Appeal.

In the case of Morgan v. Morgan, a petition was presented asking the court to require the respondent to pay over to the petitioner a sufficient sum to enable her to prosecute an appeal from the decree of the court below, the same to cover the cost of the transcript of record, and a reasonable attorney's fee. It also prayed an order enjoining the respondent from taking possession of certain real estate then in the occupation of the petitioner and her children. The decree below granted the respondent an absolute divorce on the ground of petitioner's adultery; and while providing for the payment of accrued alimony and counsel fees, and for the support and maintenance of three children whose custody was awarded to petitioner, and for payment of the costs of the proceeding by the husband and the party named as co-respondent, denied an application to compel the husband to pay a further sum to enable petitioner to prosecute an appeal from said decree. An appeal was noted, and an appeal bond filed; and thereupon, without filing the transcript of record in the Court of Appeals, the appellant filed her petition in that court to compel the husband to provide the costs of appeal. The power of the court to do this was denied by the husband. The court, while not deciding the question of its power, in a proper case, to pass such an order, holds that it has no jurisdiction to exercise it in the case presented by the petition. Without having before it the transcript of record, there is no proper foundation for the exercise by the court of discretion upon a prayer for an order either affecting the merits of the appeal or the charges incidental to its prosecution. The petition was therefore denied, in an opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Shepard.

Removal of Snow From Sidewalks.

In the case of Lee v. District of Columbia, the question involved was the validity of the regulation promulgated by the Commissioners of this District requiring the removal of snow from the sidewalks. The judgment of the Police Court is reversed in an opinion by Mr. Justice Morris, which reaffirms the previous decision in the case of Coughlin v. District of Columbia, wherein the regulation was held invalid, the Commissioners being without lawful authority to make the same. As the law now stands, the duty of removing such obstructions is upon the Commissioners, and they can not escape the performance of that duty by attempting to impose it upon individual citizens.

The mandate was stayed until the further order of the court to enable the Commissioners to apply to the Supreme Court of the United States for a writ of certiorari.

Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

ALLAN L. McDERMOTT, RECEIVER, ETC., APPELLANT,

v.

CHARLES E. SEVERE, BY NEXT FRIEND.

RAILWAYS; NEGLIGENT CONSTRUCTION; EVIDENCE; INSTRUCTIONS; DAMAGES.

1. In an action for personal injuries, where the question is whether the defendant railway company was negligent in the construction and maintenance of its track at a crossing, it appearing that a space 2½ inches wide was left between the inner edge of the rail and the crossing board, in which space the plaintiff, a child of 7 years, caught his foot and was run down, while evidence of the general custom of other railways in the matter of construction, maintenance, and operation is probably proper for consideration of the jury in determining the question of negligence, it is neither conclusive nor of especially great weight; and an instruction based entirely upon the evidence as to the custom of railways in respect of the space usually left between the inner edge of the rail and the crossing board is properly refused.
2. The fact that no similar accident had ever before occurred within the knowledge of the defendant, even if admissible, is of no weight in determining the question of negligent construction.
3. Held, that under the facts and circumstances of the case, the question whether the motorman, who had ample opportunity to do so after he first saw the plaintiff with other children on or near the track, was not guilty of negligence in failing to get his car under such control that he could have stopped it in time to avoid running over plaintiff after he actually saw that his foot was caught between the board and the rail, was properly submitted to the jury for determination.
4. A requested instruction, that if the motorman sounded his gong when far enough away from plaintiff and his associates so that they had sufficient time to leave the track before the car reached them, he had the right to assume they would not do so, and was not required to commence to stop the car until such time as he discovered the plaintiff had his foot caught between the rail and board, held properly refused.
5. Where an objectionable element is contained in a charge that is correct in general and is not stated as an independent proposition, a general exception to the entire charge is not sufficient.
6. In an action for personal injury to a child of 7 years, resulting in the loss of a leg, the jury held properly instructed they might take into consideration in awarding damages the pecuniary loss directly resulting from the injury which they may find from the evidence he is reasonably likely to sustain hereafter in consequence of his being deprived of one of his legs.

No. 1464. Decided April 4, 1905.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at Law, No. 45,838, entered upon a verdict for the plaintiff in an action for personal injuries. Affirmed.

Mr. C. C. Cole and Mr. J. J. Darlington for the appellant.

Mr. A. S. Worthington and Mr. Wm. Meyer Lewin for the appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice SHEPARD delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is an appeal from a judgment in an action for personal injuries.

Plaintiff, then a child of seven years, lived with his father near the line of the double track electric railway, between Riverdale and Washington, operated by defendant as receiver of the City and Suburban Railway Company.

Plaintiff's father and mother had gone on a short visit to Cape May and were expected to reach home, by way of the electric railway from Washington, on Sunday, August 31, 1902, about 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Erickson Severe, the plaintiff, had two brothers, Edward and Raymond, of the age of 9 and 5 years respectively. About 1.30 o'clock the three boys went to the customary stopping place of the cars, when passengers desired to get on or off, which was indicated by signs upon poles erected near the tracks.

There was no street or public highway crossed by the railway at the point, but, under agreement with the donor of the right of way, the defendant had constructed and maintained a board crossing on both tracks, which in the evidence was spoken of as a platform. Persons often crossed on foot to reach the fields and waters on the other side. The evidence tended to show that the boys went there to meet their parents upon their expected arrival.

The eldest boy, Edward, testified that they stayed about an hour together waiting near the track, sitting for a time near a small power house situated near the railway. That he left his brothers standing on the platform and went to the house for a drink of water, intending to return and wait for his parents. On his return Raymond met him at the gate, saying Erickson's foot was caught at the track. That he ran down and saw his brother had his foot caught between the rail and the boards of the crossing; saw a car coming down the track at the same time from 50 to 60 feet away. That he was on the boards and waved his hat and called to the motorman to stop. That the car did not stop until after it struck his brother.

Plaintiff corroborated his brother's evidence in regard to their coming to the tracks, and his brother's return to the house for water. He said that after Edward left Raymond's foot got caught between the rail and board. That he did not notice what Raymond had been doing just before this. That he went to Raymond and loosed his foot, and just as he was going back his own foot caught as he was crossing over. Witness could not pull his foot out and Raymond went to tell Edward. Raymond and Edward met at the gate and came running back. His back was to the car when he heard it coming. He turned his head and saw it coming. He waved his hand. Edward was waving his hat up and down and calling to the motorman. Raymond was behind Edward and waving also. The car was close on him when he saw it first. He saw the motorman when he tried to stop, but he was struck and dragged two or three yards. His left foot was the one caught. Other evidence showed that the plaintiff's leg was badly mangled; that he was carried in the car to Washington, and that his leg was amputated at the hospital.

A passenger on the car testified that the car stopped with a sudden jolt, and that at the time two little boys were on the bank jumping up and down and hallooing. Another passenger testified for defendant that his attention was attracted by the repeated ringing of the bell, and looking out he saw a boy on one of the tracks waving his hand. Did not see the plaintiff. The next thing that occurred was a jolt as the car was brought to a stop. The motorman was putting on the brakes as hard as he could.

could not tell how far the car went from the first time that he saw the boy mentioned.

The motorman, testifying for defendant, said that he saw the boy on the track about 300 or 400 feet away. That three boys were on the track running and jumping backwards and forwards across the tracks. That about 150 feet away he sounded his gong. That two of the boys got back on the bank and one stayed on the track. That he rang the gong repeatedly. That he was about 35 or 40 feet away when he saw that the boy was not going to get off the track. That he applied the brakes with all his power and reversed the power, stopping the car as quickly as he could. That when he stopped and got off he found the boy about the center of the car. That he had often seen the same boy and others standing on the track, and that as the car got almost to him he would jump off, clap his hands and laugh. That he did not see either of the two boys on the bank wave their hands. Plaintiff did not wave to him, and had his face towards him when struck. That he saw his foot was hung when he was about 30 or 35 feet from him. That the car was between 36 and 38 feet in length, and was running about 8 or 9 miles per hour. Another motorman testified that he had frequently observed boys, plaintiff among them, playing on the crossing and jumping off the tracks ahead of the cars. A witness living near by testified to the same effect. There was testimony tending to show that the boards of the crossing fitted closely to the outside rail. On the inside there was a space of from 2 5-8 inches to 2 11-16 inches between the edge of the board and the tip of the rail, in which the flange of the wheel ran. The rail was the ordinary T rail. The board was square-edged, and under the top of the rail the space widened. The shoe which plaintiff wore at the time was produced and the heel showed that it had been caught in this space.

Defendant introduced several witnesses, among them the contractor who laid the crossing and others familiar with such construction, whose evidence tended to show that it was customary upon railways generally to leave a space of from 2⅛ to 2½ inches for the entry and play of the flange of the wheel on the inside of each rail. One of these, a general contractor for such work, said that on steam railways the width is usually from 2¼ to 2½ inches because the wheels have a little more tread; that the space is left because if a stone should get in the space the flange would press it down, preventing derailment; that the stone ballast will work out and leave the space deeper, and that work has to be kept up in repair, and sometimes the board must be taken up to fill the low place. If not attended to the road will work out of surface. That in all the crossings on defendant's road the spaces were made from 2 inches to 2⅛ inches in width. Another of these having testified that the usual space left on railways was from 2 to 2½ inches, said that the flange of the rail level was ¾ of an inch thick and tapered to practically nothing. He further said that in the city streets a special guard and grooved rail is laid.

Plaintiff, in rebuttal, offered evidence tending to show that at two other crossings on defendant's line the space left between the board and the rail was much narrower than the one in question, there being just width enough for the wheel flange and no more. Also that there was no filling of earth or gravel between the board and rail at the time, and that the board was 2 inches thick, and that subsequently the defendant had filled it in, but the filling would wash out from time to time.

The plaintiff and his elder brother denied that they had been in the habit of playing on the tracks and jumping off as claimed by defendant's witnesses. The younger boy, Raymond, was offered as a witness, but the court pronounced him incompetent after examining him for the purpose.

The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for $15,000. The court also required them to return answers to the following special issues:

"1. Was the defendant guilty of negligence in the improper construction or maintenance of the crossing?

"2. Was the defendant guilty of negligence in the improper management of the car?

"3. Did the motorman do all in his power to stop the car as soon as he saw the plaintiff's foot was caught in the space between the rail and plank?" They answered "yes" to the first two of these and disagreed as to the third. "Thereupon," as recited in the record, "counsel for the plaintiff consent that the jury may answer said third interrogatory in the affirmative, but said jury was discharged from further considering said interrogatory."

It is conceded, by reason of the special findings of the jury, that the defendant was guilty of negligence, not only in the construction and maintenance of the crossing, but also in the management and control of the car; that error in the instructions upon both points must be shown in order to obtain a reversal of the judgment, because either finding alone is sufficient support therefor. On the first of these issues the court charged the jury as follows:

"The construction there is said to be faulty. Of course in determining the question whether or not it is faulty, you must consider all the testimony in the case, the construction that has been used, and the reason that is given for making the construction in the way it was made; and yet if you find that it was obviously dangerous, notwithstanding the testimony, this company should not be held free from blame for adopting it. That is one question upon which you should exercise your judgment, that is upon the question whether or not there was obvious danger in a construction like this, in the width of the hole, in the depth of the hole, in view of the place where it was located and the fact that children did go on this place, which was known to the officers and employees of the defendant, and whether or not they were in the habit of crossing at that point and playing upon that track. It is for you to determine whether or not, under all of these circumstances it was a dangerous situation and should have been observed by the defendant."

The court also gave the following extract from the instruction asked by the defendant and refused as a whole: "And the jury should determine the question whether the construction was negligent in the light of the facts prior to the accident and not afterwards. And the question upon that point is not whether such an accident was possible, but whether it was reasonably to be anticipated."

The defendant asked the following special instruction, which was refused:

"If the jury shall find from the evidence that the crossing or platform at the place where the accident happened was constructed in the usual and ordinary way of constructing such crossings in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and that such construction had been in use in that and other places for some years prior to this accident, and that no accident of the kind in question had occurred prior to that time in the District of Columbia or elsewhere to the knowledge of the defendant's officers or agents, and that a reasonably prudent man would not have anticipated such an accident from such construction, then the verdict should be for the defendant. And the jury should determine the question whether the construction in question was negligent in the light of the facts prior to the accident and not afterwards. And the question upon that point is not whether such an accident was possible, but whether it was reasonably to be anticipated."

The instruction given left the question of negligent construction and maintenance fairly to the jury upon all of the evidence relating thereto, and there was no error in refusing defendant's special instruction based entirely upon the evidence relating to the general custom of railways in respect of the space usually provided between the inner edge of the rail and the edge of the crossing board. Evidence of the general custom of other railways in the matter of construction, maintenance, and operation is not always admissible even, and though probably proper, in this case, for the consideration of the jury in the determination of the question of negligence submitted to it, it is neither conclusive nor of specially great weight. Wabash Ry. Co. v. McDaniels, 107 U. S. 454, 461; T. P. R. Co. v. Behrman, 189 U. S. 468, 470; G. T. R. Co. v. Richardson, 91 U. S. 454, 469; Weaver v. B. & O. R. Co., 22 Wash. Law Rep. 393, 3 App. D. C. 436, 448, and cases cited. See, also, Spooner v. D. L. & W. R. R. Co., 115 N. Y. 22; R. R. Co. v. Walter, 147 Ill. 60, 64; L. E. & W. R. Co., v. Mugg, 132 Ind. 168, 174; Hamilton v. R. R. Co., 36 Iowa, 33, 37; Koons v. St. L. & I. M. R. Co., 65 Mo. 592; Helfenstein v. Medart, 136 Mo. 595, 617; Mayhew v. Sullivan Mining Co., 76 Me. 100, 111; City of Champaign, 50 Ill. 61, 65.

The question as here presented is quite different from that in Asphalt Co. v. Mackey, 15 App. D. C. 410, 425: 28 Wash. Law Rep. 35, upon which the appellant relies. There, in an action for injury to an employee, the evidence showed that the appliance was one commonly in use and considered safe, that it was not out of repair, and that the injury was due to careless handling by a fellow servant, and it was held that it was not error to refuse an instruction permitting the jury to find that the defendant had been negligent because of its failure to substitute for a reasonably safe appliance in general use another, and, in the opinion of the jury, a superior one.

Under an assignment of error on the refusal of the court to direct a verdict for the defendant, the contention of the appellant, on the argument, has been that the evidence of the general custom of construction of like crossings is conclusive proof of the exercise of reasonable care, but the refused instruction does not go that length.

As before said, the evidence in this regard was clearly not conclusive; nor was it of an exceptional character and weight that required the court to give it emphasis in charging the jury. It is to be remembered also that the customary space left to receive the flanges of the car wheels was proved to have been something less, even upon steam railways, than that at the place of the accident; that there was evidence tending to show that the flanges were not more than three-fourths of an inch wide at the surface of the rail, and narrowed sharply for the very short distance to their rims; that there was evidence tending to show considerably less space for the purpose at other of defendant's crossings; and that though no similar accident had been known to have occurred before on any of defendant's crossings, the foot of the plaintiff's younger brother had been caught in the same opening a few minutes before. Moreover, that no similar accident had ever before occurred within the knowledge of the defendant, a fact upon which stress is laid in the refused instruction, is of no weight in determining the question of negligent construction. Many well considered cases hold that such evidence is not even admissible. Hodges v. Bearse, 129 Ill. 87, 89; Burgess v. Davis Sulphur Ore Co., 165 Mass. 71, 75; Bloor v. Town of Delafield, 69 Wis. 273, 277; Temperance Hall Assn. v. Giles, 33 N. J. L. 260, 263. The question of admissibility, however, it is not necessary here to decide. It may be added also that in one of the cases above cited the injury was caused by a like construction, and the question of negligence was held one proper for the determination of the jury. Spooner v. D. L. & W. R. Co., 115 N. Y. 22, 33.

On the second point the defendant requested the following special instruction, which was refused:

"If the jury shall find from the evidence that the motorman sounded his gong when he was far enough away from the plaintiff and his associates so that they had sufficient time to leave the track before the car reached them, he had the right to assume that they would do so, and he was not required to commence to stop the car until such time as he discovered that the plaintiff had his foot caught between the rail and plank; and if they shall further find that as soon as the motorman made such discovery he did all in his power to stop the car before it struck the plaintiff, then they should find for the defendant."

Several other instructions of like purport were asked and refused, but as they comprehend the first point also and contain the matter relating to the construction of the crossing that has been passed upon they will be omitted.

The court thereupon charged the jury as follows:

"On the other question, as to whether the motorman did all that he could possibly do under the circumstances to avert this danger you will have to consider all of the testimony, not only that of the plaintiff, but of the defendant, and try to reconcile it so far as you can in order to ascertain where the fact lies. Was it prudent in that motorman, under all the circumstances of the case, to calculate that these children would be off from that track and out of danger when he got there? Or was it requisite for him, as a prudent and reasonable man, to have his car under control, so that he could stop very suddenly in case they were not out of danger when he got there? Of course, in determining that question you are to consider what had been the habit of children about playing at that place. You are not to attribute any contributory negligence to the plaintiff, because this plaintiff is less than seven years of age and the law does not give him discretion. Adults have to look out for children of that kind. But at the same time he may have been in the habit of jumping off and on that track in such a way that the motorman might have been justified in concluding there would be no danger. You are to look at all the surrounding facts and see whether that is true, whether he was justified in that calculation. There was one boy still smaller than the boy who was injured, and according to the motorman's own statement the three boys were running back and forth across the track. It is for you to determine whether or not he should have gotten into close proximity to them without getting his car under such control that he could have stopped very suddenly if necessary to prevent an accident. Of course, after he saw that the boy's foot was caught he must do everything to stop the car. But I call your attention to the time before he could see that the boy's foot was caught and ask you to consider what it would have been prudent for him to do before that time, considering all the surrounding circumstances, considering the formation of this plank crossing, of this track and of this platform, and considering the fact, as the motorman says it was a fact, that children were frequently there running back and forth. Should he have anticipated that there might have been some kind of danger there, and should he have stopped his car or gotten it under control before he even saw any signal or waving or before he saw that the boy's foot was caught. Of course, after he saw that the boy's foot was caught it must be his duty to stop just as soon as he can in order to prevent the accident. I have no doubt he did that. But whether he discharged his whole duty towards these children, whom he admits having seen there before that time, is a question for the jury."

We are of the opinion that there was no error either in giving the one instruction or refusing the other. Under all of the facts and circumstances of the case it was proper to submit to the determination of the jury the question whether the motorman, who had ample time to do so after he first saw the children on or near the track, was not guilty of negligence in failing to get his car under such control that he could have stopped it in time to avoid running over the plaintiff after he actually saw that his foot had been caught between the board and the rail. City Pass. R. Co. v. Cooney, 87 Md. 266, 283; Welsh v. Jackson, 81 Mo. 466; Levington v. Wabash R. Co., 170 Mo. 452, 471; Holden v. Missouri, etc. R. Co., 76 S. W. Rep. 973 (Mo. 1903); Danville R. & E. Co. v. Hodnett, 101 Va. 361; Strutzel v. St. P. City R. R. Co., 47 Minn. 543, 545; Bray v. St. P. C. R. Co., 87 Minn. 280, 284; Forrestal v. M. E. R. & L. Co., 119 Wis. 495, 500; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Van Arsdell (Ky. 1904), 77 S. W. Rep. 1103; Wallace v. City, etc. R. Co. (Oregon, 1894), 25 L. R. A. 663; and see Spooner v. D. L. & W. R. Co., 115 N. Y. 22, 33; O'Connor v. B. & L. R. Co., 135 Mass. 352, 356, 361.

The last question for consideration arises on an exception taken to the charge of the court instructing the jury in respect of the measure of damages, as follows:

"The jury are instructed that if they find a verdict for the plaintiff they should render a verdict in his favor for such a sum (not exceeding the amount claimed in the declaration) as in their judgment will reasonably compensate him for the pain resulting from the injury and from the loss of his leg; for the inconvenience to which he has been put and which he will be likely to be put during the remainder of his life in consequence of the loss of his leg; for the mental suffering, past and future, which the jury may find to be the natural and necessary consequence of the loss of his leg, and for such pecuniary loss as the direct result of the injury which the jury may find from the evidence that he is reasonably likely to sustain hereafter in consequence of his being deprived of one of his legs.

"You must exercise your own best judgment in regard to that. Of course you are limited by the declaration and can not exceed the amount claimed, $25,000. Of course that is not a suggestion to you that you should take that as a criterion to go by. That is only a limit, above which you can not go. It is not a suggestion that you should go to that amount. The question is simply: What is proper compensation to this boy for this injury, in case you find a verdict in his favor? What is proper compensation considering all the circumstances, the wound, the suffering, his probable length of life, the handicap he will sustain by reason of this wound during the remainder of his life—make an estimate as best you can on that subject."

Defendant asked no special instruction on this point and pointed out no specific objection to the charge given, but excepted thereto in general terms. The following special objections have been urged on the argument: (1) That the jury were told that if they found for the plaintiff their verdict should not exceed the amount claimed in the declaration; (2) that there was no evidence from which the jury could compute the pecuniary damage of the plaintiff due to the deprivation of the use of his leg throughout life; (3) that damages for this deprivation until plaintiff shall attain the age of 21 years accrue to his father and not to him; (4) that future mental suffering is not an element of damage.

As said before, the exception to the charge was general and not specific. And recurring to the assignment of errors we find but two of the objections now contended for pointed out therein. These are: (1) "The jury should not have been permitted to consider future mental suffering in enhancement of damages; (2) the jury should not have been permitted to consider future pecuniary loss to the plaintiff by being deprived of the use of his leg."

Under these limitations in the assignment of error the first and third objections before stated pass out of consideration. However, they are of no practical importance under the circumstances. The expression in the first part of the charge relating to mental suffering in the future was part of an instruction that was good in general, and the language is substantially similar to that of a charge on the measure of damages that has been held good by the Supreme Court of the United States under a general exception. W. & G. R. R. v. Harmon, 147 U. S. 571, 573, 584; see, also, D. C. v. Moulton, 15 App. D. C. 363, 367, 379: 27 Wash. Law Rep. 753. Whether future mental anguish forms an element of damages for the consideration of the jury, save under peculiar conditions which may or may not be found in the case before us, is a question that we need not consider in the absence of a special instruction, or specific exception directing the attention of the trial court thereto. The rule is well settled that where an objectionable element is contained in a charge that is correct in general, and is not stated as an independent proposition, a general exception to the entire charge is not sufficient. T. & P. Ry. Co. v. Humble, 181 U. S. 57, 67; T. & P. Ry. Co. v. Cody, 166 U. S. 606, 616; B. & P. R. R. v. Mackey, 157 U. S. 71, 91, 92, and cases cited; De Forest v. U. S., 11 App. D. C. 458, 464: 26 Wash. Law Rep. 346; Ryan v. R. R. Co., 8 App. D. C. 542, 543: 24 Wash. Law Rep. 333. This rule of practice is directly applicable to the conditions here presented. The charge given was apparently adopted from that approved in W. & G. R. Co. v. Harmon, supra, and it does not appear from the language used that the court contemplated future mental anguish as an independent element of plaintiff's damages. Had special attention been called to this language before submission to the jury the ambiguity might have been corrected.

Assuming that the second point raised in the error as assigned may be available under the general exception, we are of the opinion that it is not well taken. Damages of the kind are clearly recoverable in the case of an adult. In such a case it is within the power of the plaintiff to introduce evidence of the ordinary earning capacity of the party at the time, but still there remains a large element of uncertainty which must be left to the sound discretion of the jury. In the case of an infant of the age of the plaintiff there can be no like evidence, but it is nevertheless clear that a similar damage must occur. Rosencranz v. Lindell Ry. Co., 108 Mo. 9, 17; Somitz v. St. L. I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 119 Mo. 256, 277; T. & P. Ry. Co. v. O'Donnell, 58 Tex. 27, 44. Evidence relating to the probable earnings of the infant plaintiff after attaining an age when he might reasonably be expected to undertake regular occupation or employment would necessarily consist of conjecture on the part of the witness. There is no ground for the introduction of evidence in the nature of expert testimony, and the ascertainment must be left to the common experience of the jury charged with the responsibility of returning a fair verdict under all the circumstances—a verdict that is at the same time subject to the approval or disapproval of the trial court. Any other rule would deny to all infants the recovery of any damages whatever on account of the diminution of future earning capacity which must necessarily result from the loss of a limb, and would work not only hardship, but injustice also. The consequential uncertainty of the computation of such damages, as is the case in that permitted for pain and suffering, should be borne by the wrongdoer rather than by the victim of his wrongdoing.

Finding no reversible error in the proceedings on the trial, the judgment will be affirmed with costs. It is so ordered.

Affirmed.

THE COLUMBIAN CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE, APPELLANT,

v.

ROBERT J. WYNNE, POSTMASTER-GENERAL, ET AL.

SECOND-CLASS MAIL MATTER; INSTITUTIONS OF LEARNING; CORRESPONDENCE COLLEGE; REVOCATION OF CERTIFICATE.

1. An incorporated joint stock company, conducting a correspondence college for the gain and profit of its shareholders, is not an "institution of learning," within the meaning of the act of Congress of July 16, 1894, admitting the periodical publications of such institutions to the mails as second-class matter.
2. The fact that the act of 1894 was, at the time of its passage, construed by the Postmaster-General then in office, as conferring upon publishers, such as the correspondence college referred to, the right to mail their publications at second-class rates, does not prevent a succeeding Postmaster-General from revoking the certificate of admission to the mails as second-class matter on reaching the conclusion that the publication in question was not within the meaning of the act.

No. 1459. Decided March 7, 1905.

APPEAL by complainant from decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in Equity, No. 23,583, dismissing a bill filed to enjoin the revocation of a certificate admitting a publication to the mails as second-class matter. Affirmed.

Mr. Charles A. Ray and Mr. Arthur A. Birney for the appellant.

Mr. H. H. Glassie for the appellee.

Mr. Justice DUELL delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is an appeal from a decree in equity of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia dismissing the bill of complaint filed by the appellant seeking to enjoin the appellees, the defendants below, from revoking or canceling an existing certificate of entry entitling the appellant to mail at the pound rate as second-class matter its publication, "The Student at Home." The case was heard on bill and answer.

The appellant, the Columbian Correspondence College, is an educational organization incorporated under the general incorporation act of the State of West Virginia, and has its principal office or place of business in the city of Washington. It is a joint stock company having a capital of $60,000, divided into shares of $10 each and with the privilege of increasing its capital stock to the sum of $100,000. Its method of instruction is what has become known as the correspondence method, which its name sufficiently defines. It has several thousand students enrolled as members of its various classes in law, normal, civil service, bookkeeping, and stenography, and literature and journalism. The publication is sent to such persons as have made written application to the corporation for its catalogues and for information regarding the scope and work of the corporation, and to such persons as having made such formal application, have not, on receipt of the first number of the paper mailed to them, enrolled themselves as students. The publication was originally admitted to the mails at the rate fixed by law for second-class matter July 31, 1899, and on the occasion of its change from a semi-monthly to a monthly publication it was again submitted for admission as second-class matter July 18, 1900, and duly admitted. The bill alleges, and the answer does not deny, that it is the intention of the Postmaster-General to revoke or cancel the certificate of entry upon the ground that the appellant is not a "regularly incorporated institution of learning" within the meaning of the act of July 16, 1894.

Two questions are presented by the assignment of errors, which allege in substance that the court below erred in holding that the appellant is not a regularly incorporated institution of learning within the meaning of the act of July 16, 1894, and that it is not entitled to transmit through the mails its publication at the second-class rate of postage.

1. Appellant's counsel states the first question to be:

"Is an incorporated joint stock company, conducting a correspondence college for the gain and profit of its shareholders, a 'regularly incorporated institution of learning' within the meaning of the act of July 16, 1894?"

The act of July 16, 1894, referred to, is:

"That from and after the passage of this act all periodical publications issued from a known place of publication at stated intervals and as frequently as four times a year by or under the auspices of a benevolent or fraternal society or order organized under the lodge system and having a bona fide membership of not less than one thousand persons, or by a regularly incorporated institution of learning, or by or under the auspices of a trades union, and all publications of strictly professional, literary, historical, or scientific societies, including the bulletins issued by State boards of health, shall be admitted to the mails as second-class matter, and the postage thereon shall be the same as on other second-class matter, and no more: Provided, further, that such matter shall be originated and published to further the objects and purposes of such society, order, trades union, or institution of learning, and shall be formed of printed paper sheets without board, cloth, leather, or other substantial binding, such as distinguish printed books for preservation from periodical publications."

This court, in Chicago Business College v. Payne, 20 App. D. C. 606; 30 Wash. Law Rep. 812, had occasion to pass upon the same question as the one here raised, and its conclusion was that a corporation similar to the appellant was not an institution of learning within the meaning of the act of Congress referred to. The reasons upon which its conclusion was based are fully set forth in the opinion of the court in that case and it would be a work of supererogation to restate them. We are asked, however, to review that decision in the light of the additional facts presented. We fail to find anything in the record which is sufficient to differentiate the cases so as to lead to a contrary decision in the one at bar. It is true the proceedings are different in form, the former one asking for a writ of mandamus to compel the Postmaster-General to admit a publication to the mails as second-class matter, while in the present case an injunction is sought to prevent that officer from canceling or revoking a certificate of entry of a publication to the mails as second-class matter. In our opinion the form of remedy does not affect the question at issue, and, if this court was correct in its interpretation of the statute, its decision should stand whether relief by injunction or by mandamus be sought. It is further argued that this court, in the prior case, should have passed upon the question of its jurisdiction to review the departmental action, and that until that question was decided it could not lawfully determine questions arising on the merits. We do not consider that there is anything in this contention which robs the decision in that case of its weight as an authority. Under the circumstances of that case this court was clearly justified in considering the merits. In Bates & Guild Co. v. Payne, 194 U. S. 106, 32 Wash. Law Rep. 297, involving an analogous question, it was aptly said:

"Upon this principle, and because we thought the question involved one of law rather than of fact, and one of great general importance, we have reviewed the action of the Postmaster-General in holding serial novels to be books rather than periodicals; but it is not intended to intimate that in every case hereafter arising the question whether a certain publication should be considered a book or a periodical shall be reviewed by this court. In such case the decision of the Postoffice Department, rendered in the exercise of a reasonable discretion, will be treated as conclusive."

The court below correctly ruled that the appellant was not a regularly incorporated institution of learning within the meaning of the act of July 16, 1894, and the question raised must be answered in the negative.

2. The second proposition is thus stated:

"Does the construction placed upon the statute in 1894 by the then Postmaster-General, after correspondence with the House of Representatives and an official declaration by that body, through its presiding officer, at the time of the passage of the bill, that the act would confer upon publishers in the position of complainant the privilege claimed, bind the present Postmaster-General, and require that he shall await legislative change before giving a different construction to the act?"

This question must also be answered in the negative under the authority of Houghton v.

Payne, 194 U. S. 88: 32 Wash. Law Rep. 313. The court there laid down a rule which we must follow in this case. It said:

"Great stress is laid by counsel upon the original interpretation of the term 'periodical,' as applied to these books, which it is said was continued without change under different administrations and by several successive Postmasters-General, and from 1879, the date of the passage of the act, until 1902, when the certificates granted by the former Postmasters-General were revoked by the defendant and a different classification made of the publications now in issue; that the attention of Congress was repeatedly called to the evils and to the large expense incurred by the Government by the admission of publications of this description to mail matter of the second class; that Congress seriously considered these representations, and committees made voluminous reports thereon, yet Congress persistently refused to change by legislation the ruling of the Postmasters-General in that regard." . . .

"The action of the Government consists merely in the revocation of a certificate or license admitting these publications as mail matter of the second class. No vested right having been created by such certificate, no contract can be said to be impaired by its revocation." . . .

"Contemporaneous construction is a rule of interpretation, but is not an absolute one. It does not preclude an inquiry by the courts as to the original correctness of such construction. A custom of the department, however long continued by successive officers, must yield to the positive language of the statute." . . .

"While it might well happen that by reason of the relative unimportance of the question when originally raised a too liberal construction might have been given to the word periodical, we can not think that if this question had been raised for the first time after second-class mail matter had obtained its present proportions, a like construction would have been given. Some consideration in connection with the revocation of these certificates may properly be accorded to the great expense occasioned by this interpretation, and the discrimination in favor of certain publishers and against others, to which allusion has already been made. We regard publications of the Riverside Literature Series as too clearly within the denomination of books to justify us in approving a classification of them as periodicals, notwithstanding the length of time such classification obtained."

Furthermore, it will be remembered that this case was heard and determined on the bill and answer and in the latter the defendants make this averment:

"That it was never expressly held or determined by any of their predecessors that any incorporated joint stock company engaged in the business of education, for the personal or pecuniary profit of the owners or stockholders thereof, was a 'regularly incorporated institution of learning' within the meaning of the act of July 16, 1894."

We find that there was no error in the court below. It follows that the decree appealed from must be affirmed with costs, and it is so ordered.

Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, APPELLANT,

v.

J. EDWARD CHAPMAN.

LICENSE TAX; CONTRACTORS; PAYMENT TO ESCAPE PROSECUTION; RIGHT TO RECOVER.

1. A wholesale dealer in wood and coal is not liable to the license tax imposed by paragraph 46 of section 7 of the act of July 1, 1902, upon "building and other contractors," merely because he has a contract to furnish wood and coal in large quantities to the general and municipal governments; the term "other contractors," as used in said paragraph, is too vague and uncertain to be enforced.
2. Where such dealer was arrested and charged in the Police Court with doing business without a license, and to prevent prosecution pays said tax under protest, the payment can not be regarded as a voluntary one, and an action can be maintained by him against the District to recover the amount paid.

No. 1449. Decided February 21, 1905.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at Law, No. 46,825, in a case tried by the court without a jury, upon an agreed statement of facts. Affirmed.

Mr. A. B. Duvall and Mr. F. H. Stephens for the appellant.

Mr. F. S. K. Smith for the appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice SHEPARD delivered the opinion of the Court:

This action was begun in the justice's court by J. Edward Chapman against the District of Columbia to recover the sum of $25, paid by him under protest as a license tax for the pursuit of the business of a contractor. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court of the District, and judgment was therein rendered for the plaintiff. A jury having been waived, the case was submitted to the court upon an agreed statement of facts. From this it appears that the plaintiff was a wholesale and retail dealer in wood and coal in the city of Washington; that in the course of said business he has for some years furnished large quantities of wood and coal to the United States and the District of Columbia under contracts therefor; that in June, 1903, he was notified by the District authorities that he owed a license tax as a contractor; that he informed them that he had paid the tax upon his personal property, consisting of his stock in trade, horses, wagons, etc., and asked an opinion of their counsel upon his liability for a tax as a contractor; that in reply he was informed by the secretary to the commissioners in a letter that "the Police Court had placed a very broad and ambiguous construction upon the term, 'building and other contractors,' in the act of July 1, 1902, and the assessor's office has had considerable difficulty in determining who come within this category;" that on June 9, 1903, an information was filed in the Police Court, charging plaintiff with doing business without license under the act aforesaid, and on September 10, 1903, he was arrested and brought into the Police Court to answer said charge; that he was then informed by the prosecuting officer that he would likely be fined under said charge, and to avoid the publicity and notoriety of a trial in the Police Court the plaintiff paid the said sum of $25 under protest; that he then immediately demanded a return of the said sum, which was refused.

Paragraph 46 of section 7 of the act of July 1, 1902, imposes an annual tax of $25 upon "building and other contractors," and in default of payment prescribes a penalty not exceeding $500, enforcible in the Police Court.

Clearly plaintiff is not a "building contractor," and whatever may be the liability of such a person, we agree with the trial court that this tax can not be enforced against him, as a wholesale dealer in wood and coal, simply because he had a contract to furnish the same in large quantities to the general and municipal governments for the year 1903. The term, "other contractors," is too vague and uncertain in its meaning. It leaves too much to the discretion of the assessor, who, as said in the secretary's letter, "has had considerable difficulty in determining who come within this category." The case is governed by a recent decision of this court, to which reference is made. Lockwood v. D. C., 33 Wash. Law Rep. 131.

The next question is whether the payment of the money was made under such circumstances as warrant an action for its recovery. We think that it was. It is well settled that a payment of a tax in order to prevent the seizure of one's property or the arrest and detention of one's person is compulsory. 2 Cooley Taxation (3 ed.), p. 1505; 2 Dillon Municip. Corp. (4 ed.), secs. 940, 942.

We do not think that the payment made to prevent prosecution after his arrest can be regarded as a voluntary one because he might have contested the validity of the tax in that proceeding. The conviction of the offense would ordinarily be attended with some mortification, and the penalty, aside from the cost of prosecution, might be far in excess of the amount of the tax. Moreover, there is no absolute right of appeal from the Police Court, the grant of a writ of error being a matter within the discretion of the justices of this court.

To escape those risks the plaintiff was clearly justified in paying the tax under protest, in order that he might test the right to exact it in a court of civil jurisdiction.

The judgment was right and will be affirmed with costs. It is so ordered.

Affirmed.

On a criminal prosecution it is error to instruct the jury that "the wicked flee when no man pursueth, but the innocent are as bold as a lion." Hickory v. U. S., 160 U. S. 408, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 327.

The jury are to hold the scales, but the court must determine upon the admissibility of everything that is to be cast into them. The eyes of the jury are exclusively confined to the beam; the eyes of the court to the scales; the court is to determine what the jury is to weigh, the jury are to pronounce what it does weigh. Jones v. Fulgham, 2 Murph., 6 N. C. 364, per Seawell, J.

Proceedings in bankruptcy do not abate upon the death of the alleged bankrupt, after the petition is filed and before adjudication. Matter of Spalding, 13 Am. B. R. 223.

A husband is liable for a winter bonnet which his wife has purchased on his credit, although she already has a winter hat, when it appears that such old hat was worn and faded and out of fashion and had been worn four winters, and it further appears that her husband had seen her wear the new hat without expressing disapprobation; and a husband is liable for a summer hat when his wife's old summer hat has been worn during the previous spring, summer and fall. Ogden v. Prentice, 33 Barb., N. Y. 160.

Under the new order of things, when a husband induces his wife "to enter into the business of keeping boarders, and promises to let her have all the proceeds, he is allowed to keep his promise if she keeps the boarders. It would seem that the law ought to tolerate him in being faithful to his word in such a matter, even though he has pledged it only to his wife." McNaught v. Anderson, 78 Ga. 499, 3 S. E. Rep. 668, 6 Am. St. Rep. 278, per Bleckley, C. J.

Death of Gen. Halbert E. Paine.

Gen. Halbert E. Paine, one of the justices of the peace for the District of Columbia, died at his residence in this city on Friday, April 14, 1905. General Paine had a long and distinguished career in the service of his country, both in civil and military positions, and possessed the cordial respect and esteem of a wide circle of friends and acquaintances, including men prominent in public life in all sections of the country. His character, both professional and private, was of the highest type.

The death of General Paine reduces the number of justices of the peace for this District to nine. By an order of the Supreme Court of this District, in general term, subdistrict No. 7, in which Justice Paine presided, was annexed to subdistrict No. 1, and Justice Charles S. Bundy will try cases arising in both subdistricts. The Code provides, in section 2, that when the "number of such justices of the peace shall be reduced by death, resignation, or expiration of term of service, or otherwise, to six, the number of such justices of the peace shall be six only, and if the number shall not be reduced to six until the expiration of the term of the present justices of the peace only six vacancies shall then be filled." In another column will be found a pertinent communication from Justice Samuel R. Church, calling attention to this matter, and we shall be glad to give place in our columns for its further discussion.

THIS WEEK'S DECISIONS BY THE COURT OF APPEALS.

Smoke Law; Apartment Houses Not Private Residences.

In Duehay v. District of Columbia the appeal was from a judgment of the Police Court convicting the plaintiff in error, as owner of an apartment house, of a violation of the law against the emission of dense smoke. It was contended on his behalf that an apartment house is to be considered a private residence within the meaning of the provision of the smoke law exempting private residences from its operation. The Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Shepard, denies this contention, holding the exemption to apply only to those houses that come within the general acceptation of the term "private residences," and explicitly declaring that it does not apply to apartment houses, tenement houses, or flats, wherein a number of private families may live in separate apartments, enjoying the benefits of boilers and furnaces attached to one or more great chimneys or smokestacks, and supplying heat and other conveniences for the common use. The judgment of the Police Court is therefore affirmed.

Contempt; Attempt to Influence Juror.

In McCaully v. United States, the appeal was from an order of the court below adjudging the appellant guilty of contempt of court and sentencing him to jail for six months. The specific charge against the appellant was that he had corruptly attempted to influence a juror summoned for the trial of a case in the criminal court. The proceeding was commenced by an information filed by Assistant United States Attorney Easby-Smith, and a rule to show cause was issued against McCaully, who first moved to quash the rule, and that motion being overruled, pleaded "not guilty." Testimony was taken, and Mr. Justice Wright, holding the criminal court, held him guilty of contempt and imposed sentence. It was contended for the appellant that the court was without jurisdiction to try him in a summary way without a jury, and also that the testimony was not sufficient to support the conviction. The Court of Appeals rules against the appellant on both contentions. In respect of the question of jurisdiction, the court holds that there is no possible difference between the corrupt solicitation of a jury in the court house and a precisely similar corrupt solicitation of a juror at his home or place of business. As to the sufficiency of the testimony, the court holds that, while at first sight apparently meagre, it made a prima facie case against the appellant, which he made no effort to overcome. The judgment is affirmed in an opinion by Mr. Justice Morris.

Master and Servant; Risks of Employment.

In the case of Butler v. Frazee, the action was to recover damages for personal injuries. The plaintiff was employed in a steam laundry owned by the defendant, and had one of her hands caught and crushed in a machine at which she was working. The trial court directed a verdict for the defendant, upon which there was judgment. The Court of Appeals affirms this judgment, in an opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Shepard, holding that an employee must be deemed to have accepted the risk reasonably to be apprehended when he continues in the use of defective or unsafe appliances. This law, it is held, applies both where the employee has actual notice of the condition of the appliance and where, in the usual course of its use, the defect is open to ordinary observation.

Action on Judgment of Sister State; Jurisdiction; Notice.

In Karrick v. Wetmore, the appeal was specially allowed from an order of the court below sustaining a demurrer to defendant's plea. The action was brought upon a judgment of the Superior Court for the county of Suffolk, Massachusetts. The defendant filed two pleas, the general issue of nul tiel record, and a special plea setting up that the cause against him in Massachusetts was dismissed on June 12, 1899; that under the rules of the court the dismissal became final on the first Monday in July of that year; that the cause remained dismissed for more than five terms of the court, until October 18, 1900; that in the meantime, on April 29, 1899, defendant filed his petition in bankruptcy, in which the debt for which the suit was brought was scheduled, and received his discharge in bankruptcy on June 23, 1899; that subsequent to his discharge, and while the suit in Massachusetts stood dismissed, he inquired of the clerk of said superior court and was informed that the suit was no longer pending, and relying upon this statement he took no steps in that court to suggest his discharge in bankruptcy; that the suit was sought to be restored to the docket without summons, citation, or notice of any kind to defendant, and without his knowledge; and that the court was without jurisdiction to render the judgment. The plaintiff to the special plea and the demurrer was sustained. The Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Morris, reverses this ruling, holding that the action of the said superior court in striking out the judgment of dismissal, and in rendering a new and radically different judgment against defendant without notice to him, was without jurisdiction and was null and void.

Street Extension; Order Confirming Award, Etc., Held Void and Properly Vacated.

In Macfarland et al. v. Saunders, the appeal was by the Commissioners of the District from an order of the court below sitting as a District court, setting aside an order previously made confirming a verdict, award, and assessment in the matter of the extension and widening of Sherman avenue. The Court of Appeals affirms the ruling of the court below, holding that the order vacated and set aside thereby was void because it was the absolute right of the appellee to have a new jury summoned, should he so elect, and he properly exercised his right and made known his desire by filing exceptions. The opinion cites and follows the previous decisions of the court in Brown v. Macfarland, — Wash. Law Rep. —, and other cases. Mr. Justice Duell delivered the opinion of the court.

Reduction in Number of Justices of the Peace.

Editor Washington Law Reporter:

Permit me through your columns to call attention to the reduction in the number of justices of the peace in the District of Columbia to six, which will take effect January 1 next.

The lamented death of Justice H. E. Paine has already reduced the number to nine, and compelled that part of the District, formerly "Georgetown," to seek its judicial remedies in justice's court before Mr. Justice Bundy, of subdistrict No. 1, on Fifth street, a long way to go for that purpose.

The opinion of the undersigned, based on eleven years' experience as a magistrate, is that six justices of the peace can not properly transact the steadily increasing business of these minor civil courts. It will be remembered that one, and sometimes two, of the six will be often sitting in the Police Court. In addition, a juvenile court is being urged, a good thing in itself, but meaning another assignment for the insufficient number of civil magistrates, if the juvenile court judge is ill or on vacation.

Add the summer vacations of the justices of the peace themselves, and the possibilities of illness, etc., and the proposed force of six magistrates will be utterly insufficient, and delays will arise which should never happen in these "poor men's courts" of speedy jurisdiction.

I venture to call attention to the matter, hoping that it may provoke discussion in the profession and the community, through your columns and elsewhere, in the hope that Congress will see the necessity of amendment before a congestion of business takes place.

Very respectfully yours,

Samuel R. Church.

CHARLES S. LANDRAM ET AL., EXECUTORS, ETC., ET AL., APPELLANTS, v. GABRIELLA K. JORDAN.

EQUITY PRACTICE; SERVICE BY PUBLICATION; GENERAL APPEARANCE; BILL OF REVIEW; PARTIES; TRUSTS; PERPETUITIES.

1. Irregularity in obtaining an order for service by publication upon non-resident defendants is waived by their general appearance in answer thereto.
2. The right to file a bill of review held not lost by laches where the bill was filed and writs of subpœna regularly issued, and alias process also issued and served upon one of the necessary parties defendant, within two years after entry of the original decree, notwithstanding considerable delay ensued in procuring an order for service by publication upon defendants shown to be non-residents, where there is nothing to show that this delay was unreasonable or attributable to bad faith or operated to the prejudice of defendants.
3. Whether a party interested in the subject-matter of an original bill and yet omitted therefrom is a necessary party to review the decree rendered thereon, quære.
4. An objection that the widow of one of the heirs at law of a decedent whose will, so far as it affected real estate in this District, has been decreed invalid, is a necessary party to a bill to review the original decree, not raised by plea, answer, or on the face of the demurrer, but suggested for the first time on the hearing, held made too late—the widow not being an indispensable party and her rights not concluded by the decree entered on the bill of review.
5. Where an estate has been vested in trustees upon several independent trusts, one of which is legal, though the others may not be, the estate of the trustees will be upheld to the extent necessary to enable them to execute the valid trust, though avoided as to the others.
6. Testator, by item 5 of his will, devised real estate in this District upon trusts to continue until 1928. By item 6 the rents of one piece of property were directed to be paid to a niece during life, and should these not amount to $40 per month the trustees were to add thereto sufficient to make that amount. On death of the niece the fee simple title to said property to vest in a grandson, but if she died before January 1, 1928, the grandson to receive only the rents therefrom, etc. In a proceeding to construe the will, its provisions affecting lands in this District were held void as creating perpetuities, and that the property descended to his heirs at law. Upon a bill of review filed by the niece, held that the original decree was erroneous in so far as it affected the provision for her benefit, the trust for her benefit being separate and independent, and in no wise dependent for its validity upon the other provisions of the will.

No. 1476. Decided April 4, 1905.

APPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in Equity, No. 22,729, upon a bill filed to review the decree in Equity, No. 21,422, whereby certain provisions were held void as violating the rule against perpetuities. Affirmed. For opinion below see 32 Wash. Law Rep. 501.

Mr. John J. Hemphill, Mr. Thomas P. Woodard, and Mr. W. Mosby Williams for the appellants.

Mr. Frank W. Hackett and Mr. Charles F. Wilson for the appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice SHEPARD delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is an appeal from a decree of the Supreme Court of the District sustaining a bill of review filed on October 29, 1901, by Gabriella K. Jordan against Elijah S. Drake and Leroy M. Taylor, trustees under the will of Thomas Kearney, deceased; Constance K. Vertner and Lillie K. Vertner, Edmund K. Vertner and Thomas K. Vertner, to review a decree rendered by said court on June 27, 1900, on a bill filed by Elijah S. Drake, trustee, against Leroy M. Taylor, Constance K., Lillie K., Edmund K., Thomas K. Vertner, and Gabriella K. Jordan.

It appears from the bill and exhibits that Thomas Kearney died in San Antonio, Texas, leaving a will dated June 4, 1896, by which he undertook to dispose of a large estate consisting of lands and personal property in the State of Texas, of lands in Virginia, and certain improved and unimproved real estate in the District of Columbia. Executors were appointed for the administration of the estate in Texas, and two trustees, Drake and Taylor, were appointed with general powers, and particularly for the management and control of so much of the estate as was situated in Virginia and the District of Columbia.

The will is a very long and elaborate one, giving full power of possession, control, and so forth, to the trustees, with directions concerning rents, improving property, paying taxes, paying certain sums to testator's daughter and her children, and expressly directs that said possession and powers shall continue in said trustees and their successors until January 1, 1928.

The following items of the will only are of importance in the determination of this case:

"Item 6. I hereby authorize and direct that my said trustees shall during the natural life of my beloved niece, Gabriella K. Jordan, pay over to her regularly each month, as soon as collected, all rents and revenues collected or derived from that certain property described in the third item hereof as lot No. 611 'M' street N. W., Washington, D. C., but in case said rents and revenues shall at any time be less than the sum of forty dollars for any one or more months, then my said trustees are hereby authorized and instructed to add to the sum so collected a sufficient amount to make the said sum of forty dollars for each and every month; it being my desire that she shall have a regular income of at least forty dollars per month, and that the sum be paid over to her monthly; but if the income derived from said premises shall amount to a sum in excess of forty dollars per month, she shall have the whole thereof.

Item 7 contains directions concerning the lease and disposition of the income of all the real property in the District "except that derived from the house known as No. 611 M street, which shall be paid to my niece as provided in item 6 hereof."

"Item 8. It is my desire and my said trustees are hereby authorized and instructed that, upon the death of my said niece, Gabriella K. Jordan, the fee simple title to the house and lot, No. 611 M street, N. W., Washington, D. C., shall be and is hereby vested in my grand son, Thomas K. Vertner, provided, that should my said niece die before the 1st day of January, 1928, then in that event, said Thomas K. Vertner shall only receive the net rents and revenues derived by my trustees therefrom, and provided further that, should my said niece, die before my said grand son shall have attained the age of twenty-two years, then, from the date of the death of my niece, until the said Thomas K. Vertner shall have arrived at the age of twenty-two years the rents and revenues derived from said lot shall be disposed of in the same manner as provided in item 7 hereof in regard to the rents and revenues derived from other property mentioned therein, except the vacant lot on Twentieth street, N. W.

"Item 20. It is my desire and my trustees are hereby instructed to keep all the houses herein entrusted to them insured and in repair; to keep all taxes due or to become due thereon paid, and in case of the destruction or injury of them or any of them, to rebuild or repair them in accordance with the instructions in item 17 hereof.

"Item 21. For fear that there may be some difficulty in construing the different provisions of this [will], relating to the moneys that may come into the hands of the trustees herein named, I desire to say that it is my intention that all the moneys arising from the rents of the Washington, D. C. property, except that which is to go to Gabriella K. Jordon, shall be placed in a common fund for the payment (1) of taxes, insurance and repairs on said property and of the premises at Luray, Virginia; (2) of (90) ninety dollars per month to my said daughter, Constance K. Vertner during her natural life; (3) for the support, education and maintenance of my said three Vertner grandchildren until Lillie K. Vertner shall have arrived at the age of nineteen years, and until Edmund K. and Thomas K. shall have arrived at the age of twenty-two years respectively."

Leroy M. Taylor declined to accept the trust. Elijah S. Drake accepted and undertook its execution for several years, during which, it is alleged, he paid the sum of $40 per month to Gabriella K. Jordan. On May 15, 1900, Drake filed a bill in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia against Taylor, who, it was alleged, had declined to accept the trust, Constance K., Lillie K., Edmund K., and Thomas K. Vertner, and Gabriella K. Jordan. The bill sets out the will and alleges as the reason for filing the same, that: "Questions have arisen as to the validity of the provisions in the said will relating to the real estate within the District of Columbia, and your complainant is advised that the said provisions are void because they attempt to create a perpetuity."

The prayer is for the construction of the will.

Constance Vertner answered, alleging the invalidity of the will because it attempted to create a perpetuity. She also alleged that she and her brother, Edmund Kearney, were the sole heirs at law of the testator; that said Edmund Kearney died June 4, 1898, leaving a widow and no children, whereby defendant was his sole heir at law; and that Edmund Kearney left a will which was not so attested as to pass real estate in the District of Columbia. A guardian ad litem was appointed for the three infant defendants and filed a formal answer. Gabriella K. Jordan, who lived in New York, filed the following as her answer:

"This defendant being advised that the bill of complaint herein involves only questions of law as to the construction of a will, and as she is not advised as to the law governing such matters and things therein set forth she prays the court to make such a decree herein as will protect her rights in the premises and to this end admits the matters and things in the said bill of complaint to be true."

Neither she nor Constance Vertner were represented by counsel, and it would seem that it was regarded by the court as a mere friendly proceeding. On June 27, 1900, the decree which is now sought to be reviewed was entered as follows:

"This cause having been calendared, was submitted on the pleadings filed therein and duly considered, it is, by the court, this 27th day of June, 1900, adjudged, ordered, and decreed that the provisions of the last will and testament of Thomas Kearney, deceased, so far as the same devise or attempt to dispose of lands and tenements lying and being within the District of Columbia, are deemed and held to be in violation of the provisions of law prohibiting the creation of perpetuities and contrary to the statute in such cases made and provided; and it is further adjudged, ordered, and decreed that said provisions of said will are deemed and held to be void and of no effect and that as to the said land and premises the said Thomas Kearney died intestate and the same descended to his heirs at law."

On October 29, 1901, subpœna on this bill of review was issued to all of the defendants and returned "Not to be found." April 7, 1902, alias subpœna was issued to all and returned "Summoned Leroy M. Taylor personally April 7, 1902, Aulick Palmer, marshal. No copies for other defendants." April 17, 1903, an order of publication was passed for all defendants except Taylor, and proof of publication was filed September 25, 1903.

Constance K. Vertner, Lillie K. Vertner, and Elijah S. Drake entered demurrers on November 5, 1903, on the ground that the bill stated no case for relief. The death of Constance K. Vertner, testate, was suggested on July 7, 1904, and on the same day her executors, Charles S. Landram and John A. Broaddus, were made parties defendant.

On July 8, 1904, the demurrers were overruled, and the defendants electing not to answer, a final decree was entered modifying the decree in the original suit, "in so far as it relates to the provisions of said will in regard to the devise of the annuity or legacy to the complainant Gabriella K. Jordan, which provisions are hereby decreed to be valid; and it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said annuity for the full term of her natural life bequeathed to Gabriella K. Jordan, by the said last will and testament of said Thomas Kearney is a valid claim of rent-charge primarily against all rents and revenues collected or derived from lot No. 611 M street N. W., Washington, D. K. Vertner and Elijah S. Drake obtained a severance and perfected an appeal from said decree to this court. No appeal was taken on behalf of the infant defendants, but counsel have appeared on their behalf and made common cause with the appellants.

1. The contention that "the court erred in holding that the substituted service on the absent defendants, except Drake, by publication was valid, and that they were properly before the court for the purpose of making the decree that was entered," is without foundation.

It does not appear in the record that any such question was raised or ruled upon in the trial court. The parties appeared in answer to the publication of notice and made no objection thereto. The irregularity, if any, in obtaining the order of publication was waived by their general appearance.

2. There was no error in overruling the objection, presented on the hearing of the demurrer, that the complainants' right to maintain the bill of review had been lost by laches.

The bill was filed and writs of subpœna regularly issued thereon within the two years from the entry of the decree required by equity rule 88 of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. Alias process was also issued before the expiration of the two years, and served upon Taylor, one of the necessary parties in the District. Others were not found. The suit was thus commenced within any construction that may be given to common law rule 6, which applies to suits in equity also, and prosecuted in accordance with the provisions of equity rules 7 and 11. See Huysman v. Newspaper Co., 12 App. D. C. 586, 594: 26 Wash. Law Rep. 372.

It is true that there was considerable delay in prosecuting the notice by publication to the defendants shown to be non-residents. But there is nothing to show that this was unreasonable or attributable to bad faith. Webb v. Pell, 1 Paige Ch. 564; Fairbanks v. Farwell, 141 Ill. 354, 368.

Nor does it appear that any prejudice has been caused the defendants by the delay, and there is no question of intervening rights accruing during the interval.

3. The third error that has been assigned is founded on the refusal of the court to sustain the appellants' objection that Mary B. Kearney was a necessary party to the proceeding.

It is essential in a bill of review that all of the parties to the decree and their privies shall be made parties either plaintiff or defendant. Bank v. White, 8 Pet. 262, 268. And it appears that this requirement was complied with.

The objection is that Mary B. Kearney, the widow of Edmund Kearney, should have been made a party also because, since the decree annulling the will a right of dower has accrued to her in the lands in the District of Columbia to the extent of the interest of her deceased husband, Edmund Kearney, as one of the heirs at law of Thomas Kearney, deceased.

The objection that she was a necessary party was not raised by plea, answer, or on the face of the demurrer, but by suggestion on the hearing founded solely on the fact recited in the answer of Constance K. Vertner to the original bill filed May 15, 1900, that Edmund Kearney died June 4, 1898, leaving a widow, Mary B. Kearney, and no descendants. No request was then urged that she be made a party to the suit, and the cause proceeded to final decree without her. It is to be remarked also that there is nothing to show that she was living at the time that the bill of review was filed.

But passing by the question whether a party interested in the subject-matter of the original bill and yet omitted therefrom can be considered a necessary party to review the decree rendered thereon, and assuming that Mary B. Kearney is still living, her interest is a contingent one and not so inseparably connected with the claim of the parties to the suit as to make her an indispensable party to this proceeding. Indispensable parties are said to be "persons who not only have an interest in the controversy, but an interest of such a nature that a final decree can not be made without either affecting that interest, or leaving the controversy in such a condition that its final determination may be wholly inconsistent with equity and good conscience." Shields v. Barrow, 17 How. 130, 139; see, also, Story v. Livingston, 13 Pet. 359, 375; Barney v. Baltimore, 6 Wall. 280, 284; Williams v. Bankhead, 19 Wall. 563, 571.

We are of the opinion, therefore, that the objection made on the hearing came too late. Weightman v. Critic Co., 4 App. D. C. 136, 153: 22 Wash. Law Rep. 835, and cases cited. In one of the cases there cited it was said:

"It ought to be observed here, preliminarily, as a matter of practice, that although an objection for want of proper parties may be taken at the hearing, yet the objection ought not to prevail upon the final hearing upon appeal, except in very strong cases, and when the court perceives that a necessary and indispensable party is wanting. The objection should be taken at an earlier stage in the proceeding, by which great delay and expense would be avoided. The general rule as to parties undoubtedly is that when a bill is brought for relief all persons materially interested in the subject of the suit ought to be made parties, either as plaintiffs or defendants, in order to prevent a multiplicity of suits, and that there be a complete and final decree between all parties interested. But this is a rule established for the convenient administration of justice, and is subject to many exceptions, and is more or less a matter of discretion in the court, and ought to be restricted to parties whose interest is involved in the issue and to be affected by the decree. The relief granted will always be modified so as not to affect the interests of others." Mechanics Bank v. Seton, 1 Pet. 299, 306.

Whatever interest Mary B. Kearney may have is not concluded by the decree rendered herein, and may be asserted by her hereafter if desired.

4. Having disposed of the foregoing preliminary questions, we come now to the consideration of the merits of the case as presented in the bill. In this we do not find it necessary, or that it would serve any useful purpose, to accept the invitation of counsel and enter upon the consideration of the question whether the general trusts created by the will of Thomas Kearney, as decreed on the original bill, are in fact void because in violation of the rule against perpetuities. In the view that we have taken of the complainant's case, she has no direct interest in that question which renders its determination necessary, or even proper, under the circumstances. All of the parties whose interests were directly and materially affected by that part of the decree have not only acquiesced in it, but have appeared in this court also in its support.

By the terms of her bill the complainant limits her right of review to so much of that decree only as undertakes to annul the trust for her benefit in lot 611 M street N. W., and in so far as it may affect her contingent right to a monthly income of $40 during life, to be made up from the revenues of other property in the District of Columbia, in the event that the revenues of said lot shall fall short of realizing that sum.

Upon the assumption, then, of the correctness of the original decree, in so far as it declared void the several trusts of the will for the benefit of testator's daughter and grandchildren because violative of the rule against perpetuities, the contention is that the trust in favor of Gabriella K. Jordan, contained in item 6 of the will, necessarily fails with the others.

This result depends upon the inseparability of the special intention expressed in item 6 from the general intention expressed throughout in respect of the disposition of the great body of a large estate.

Undoubtedly, if it shall appear that the intention to create a trust for the life of Gabriella K. Jordan is so involved in the general scheme of the whole will as to be dependent upon it, and not capable of enforcement without doing violence to the general intention of the testator, it must fail along with the remainder of the will. Fosdick v. Fosdick, 6 Allen, 41, 48; Thorndike v. Loring, 15 Gray, 391, 398; Lovering v. Worthington, 106 Mass. 86, 88; Amory v. Lord, 9 N. Y. 403; Knox v. Jones, 47 N. Y. 389, 398.

On the other hand, a trust for general purposes may be void because unauthorized by law without necessarily rendering void a particular trust in the same will made to subserve another purpose that is authorized. Savage v. Burnham, 17 N. Y. 561, 576. And it is a rule, founded in reason as well as supported by authority, that if under settled principles of law effect can not be given to an entire will or to certain entire provisions thereof, any provision may nevertheless be given effect which is conformable to those principles, and which can be separated from the residue without doing violence to the testator's general intention. In other words, where an estate has been vested in trustees upon several independent trusts, one of which is legal though others may not be, the estate of the trustees will be upheld to the extent necessary to enable them to execute the valid trust though avoided as to the others. Oxley v. Lane, 35 N. Y. 340, 349; Van Schuyver v. Malford, 59 N. Y. 426, 432; Tiers v. Tiers, 98 N. Y. 568, 572; Burnes v. Allen, 89 Hun, 552, 558; S. C. affirmed, 154 N. Y. 741; Loring v. Blake, 98 Mass. 253, 262; Lovering v. Worthington, 106 Mass. 86, 88; Graham v. Whittridge (Md. 1904), 57 Atl. Rep. 609.

Tested by these principles, we are of the opinion that the trust created for the benefit of Gabriella K. Jordan in item 6 of the will of Thomas Kearney is a valid one and may be executed without regard to the failure of the remaining trusts for the benefit of other objects of the testator's bounty, and that it was manifest error to declare that provision of the will void along with the others, as was done in the original decree. In that provision (item 6) the testator expresses a particular and independent intention to provide an income for Gabriella K. Jordan during her life and expressly separates lot No. 611 M street N. W. from the residue of his estate in order to effect that intention. This intention to separate that lot from the rest of the estate is further shown in the special exceptions contained in items 7 and 20, before mentioned. Moreover, item 8 provides that upon the death of the life beneficiary, Gabriella K. Jordan, "the fee simple title to the house and lot No. 611 M street N. W. shall be and is hereby vested in my grandson, Thomas K. Vertner." This is followed by the words "provided my said niece die before the 1st day of January, 1928, then and in that event said Thomas K. Vertner shall only receive the net rents and revenues derived by my trustees therefrom, and provided further, that should my said niece die before my said grandson shall have attained the age of twenty-two years, then from the date of the death of my niece until the said Thomas K. Vertner shall have arrived at the age of twenty-two years the rents and revenues derived from said lot shall be disposed of in the same manner as provided in item 7 hereof in regard to the rents and revenues derived from other property mentioned therein," etc.

The first clause of item 8, before quoted, vests a remainder in fee in said lot in the grandson Thomas K. Vertner, to come into possession and enjoyment upon the termination of the trust for life for the benefit of Gabriella K. Jordan created by item 6. Richardson v. Penicks, 1 App. D. C. 261, 264: 21 Wash. Law Rep. 707, and cases cited. Conceding, as in the case of the general trusts, that the attempt in the foregoing provisos to postpone the enjoyment of the estate of the grandson may be in contravention of the rule against perpetuities, the result is the avoidance of their restraints without affecting the devise of the remainder. Neither the devise of the equitable life estate of the niece nor the remainder in fee can be rendered void by an unlawful attempt to postpone the enjoyment or restrain the alienation of the fee. Leonard v. Burr, 18 N. Y. 96, 106; Goldsborough v. Martin, 41 Md. 488, 502, 503; Lovering v. Worthington, 106 Mass. 86, 88; 2 Perry on Trusts, sec. 622; Saunders v. Vautier, 4 Beav. 115; Curtis v. Luken, 5 Beav. 147, 155. Our conclusion is, therefore, that the provisions of the will relating to Gabriella K. Jordan are separable from and independent of the others, and should have been upheld in the original decree.

The learned justice presiding in the equity court was right in the decree rendered by him modifying the original decree to that extent. If it shall become necessary, the court may, under its general equity jurisdiction, appoint another trustee, for the purpose of giving effect to the execution of the trust, and there is nothing to prevent the complainant from pursuing some appropriate proceeding to enforce the payment of the arrears of the revenues to which she is entitled.

5. We have also been asked, on behalf of the appellee, to vacate the original decree on the ground of a want of jurisdiction of the court to entertain the bill filed by the trustee for the purpose of annulling the entire will under the pretense of seeking a construction of the trusts created thereby. The suit was, indeed, an extraordinary one, and the manner in which it was prosecuted to a final decree vacating each and all of the trusts would seem to warrant the inference, to some extent, that such was the real object sought. But for the reasons given for not passing upon the validity of the will as a whole, we regard it as unimportant to determine any other question than that in which the interests of the complainant are necessarily involved.

For the reasons heretofore given the decree will be affirmed, with costs, and it is so ordered.

MARY E. BUNTEN, APPELLANT,
v.
AMERICAN SECURITY AND TRUST COMPANY.

DEED; DELIVERY; FAILURE TO RECORD; REVOCATION OF DEED; EJECTMENT.

1. Record of a deed is not essential to delivery, even though it be withheld from record by agreement of the parties.
2. The owner of real estate executed a deed conveying the property to a trust company, in fee, as trustee. The deed provided that the grantor, and her assigns, during her natural life, were to have the use, rents, and profits of the land, and that the trustee, upon her written request, should convey the property in fee, the proceeds to be used by the trustee to purchase other land to be held upon like trusts, and upon the death of the grantor the trustee should apply the property as provided in the deed. It was agreed that the deed should not be placed on record until after the death of the grantor unless she should so direct. The trust was accepted by the trustee. Subsequently the grantor notified the trustee that she wished to and did revoke the trust, and asked for the cancellation of the deed, to which the trust company replied that in its opinion it was without authority to cancel the trust, the beneficiary having acquired certain vested rights, and a method was suggested by which she might accomplish her purpose, but its suggestion was not adopted. Thereafter the grantor made a will devising the property in trust. In an action of ejectment by the devisee under the will, held that the delivery of the deed to the trust company was effectual to vest the legal title in it, and the equitable title in the beneficiary of the trust, leaving no title in the grantor at her death to be disposed of by the will.

No. 1484. Decided March 21, 1905.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at Law, No. 45,832, in favor of defendant in an action of ejectment tried by the court without a jury. Affirmed.

Mr. B. F. Leighton for the appellant.

Mr. W. D. Davidge for the appellee.

Mr. Justice DUELL delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendant appellee entered in an ejectment suit. The general issue was pleaded, issue joined thereon, and the case tried by the court, a jury having been waived by written stipulation signed by both parties.

The record discloses that one Harriet Patience Dame, an unmarried woman, on June 18, 1892, being in possession of certain real estate situate in the District of Columbia, and known as lot 43 of Lanier Heights, executed and left with the defendant a deed conveying said lot in fee simple, to it, as trustee. The deed provided that the grantor, and her assigns, during her natural life were to be permitted to use, occupy, and enjoy, and have the rents, issues, and profits of the land and premises; and further that the grantee, upon the written request of the grantor, should convey the premises in fee simple to such person or persons as she might designate in writing, and that the proceeds received therefrom, less proper costs and charges, should be used by the trustee to purchase such other real estate as might be designated by her in writing, the substituted real estate to be held upon the same trusts as the original lot; the power to sell and reinvest, under like conditions, being made continuous; and upon the death of the grantor the real estate so vested in the trustee was thereafter to be held by the trustee to apply, use and dispose of as provided by the deed of trust. It is unnecessary to set forth the uses to which the trust estate was to be put, or under whose directions it was to be, as the validity of the trusts and the administration thereof are not here in question, nor could they be in this proceeding which is a suit at law and not one in equity. Contemporaneously with the execution of the deed the parties to it executed an agreement in writing, which, after referring to the conveyance of the lot to the trustee by virtue of the deed, and to a request for its acceptance by the trustee, and in consideration of its consent so to do upon the execution of the agreement, recites that the grantor is to pay all taxes, costs, and charges which might be levied against the lot, or any substituted real estate. Provision was also made for the compensation of the trustee. It was also provided that the deed should not be placed on record in the office of the recorder of deeds until the death of the grantor unless she gave written directions that it be recorded.

Some five years after the execution and delivery of the deed and agreement the grantor wrote a letter to the trustee stating that she had conditionally conveyed the property to it; that she understood the trust had not taken effect, and that she wished to revoke it and thereby she did revoke it and asked for the cancellation of the two instruments and for their return to her.

To this letter the trustee, by its attorney, replied that after a careful reading of the deed and agreement it was of the opinion that it was without authority to cancel or annul the trust; that both instruments were deliberately executed and delivered to it for the uses intended, and that the trust had been duly accepted; that the diocese of the cathedral (the cestui que trust) had become vested with certain rights which it could not destroy and might be held answerable for. It was suggested that if she told the bishop of her desire to revoke the trust he might find some way to accomplish her desire. It does not appear that she acted upon this advice or made any further attempt to revoke the trust, though she lived for some three years thereafter.

On April 21, 1900, she executed a will which, after her death, occurring three days later, was duly admitted to probate in Merrimac county, New Hampshire. By this will, which was in proper form to vest title to real estate situate in the District of Columbia, she devised to the plaintiff, in trust, certain property, including the lot in question.

These facts present for our consideration the single question whether the deed to defendant was delivered in her lifetime so as to be effective and leave nothing for her to devise to plaintiff. The court below having answered this question in the affirmative, such decision is assigned as error.

In arriving at a conclusion it is necessary to construe the deed in the light of the agreement executed cotemporaneously. So considering them it is clear that the intent of the parties was that there should be and was a delivery of the deed to the trustee and its acceptance by it, and there was no valid revocation of the trust by the grantor. Her letter to the trustee, in the light of the answer made to it, can not be held to amount to anything. We do not think that it was in her power to withdraw the property from the operation of the trust in any such way. It is urged on behalf of the appellant that Miss Dame could have defeated the trust by the substitution of valueless property under what may be termed the substitution clause of the deed. It is idle to consider this for the very good reason that she never exercised the reserved right to substitute. The legal title to the lot became vested in the trustee by the execution and delivery of the deed June 18, 1892, and so remained in it up to and at the time of the death of the grantor, notwithstanding the fact that the beneficiaries and the trustee had no beneficial interest therein during her lifetime. It is further insisted that because the grantor provided in the agreement that the deed should not be recorded in her lifetime without her written consent it was her intention that there should be no delivery of the deed, and that failure to permit the record of the deed during her lifetime may be considered as proof of nondelivery. We think not. The delivery of a deed as between the parties is in no way affected by a failure to record it. Record of a deed is not essential to delivery, even though it be withheld from record by agreement of the parties. Fitzgerald v. Wynne, 1 App. D. C. 107: 21 Wash. Law. Rep. 611. In our opinion the agreement to withhold the deed from record during the lifetime of the grantor was not intended to and in no way made it a contingent conveyance.

The court below very clearly set forth the relations to and rights in the property in question when it said:

"Inasmuch as the will could not take effect until the death of the testatrix, and inasmuch as the devisee in the will must be treated as a volunteer, or one who takes property as a gift without consideration; and as the legal title to the defendant, and the equitable title and estate to the officers of the church, passed on the execution of the deed (the latter, however, to begin immediately on the death of the life tenant), there was no title left in the grantor to this property to be disposed of by her will."

The judgment will be affirmed with costs, and it is so ordered.

JOSEPH NAGANAB, APPELLANT,

v.

ETHAN ALLEN HITCHCOCK, SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

STATUTES; INDIAN TRIBES; POWER OF CONGRESS OVER TRIBAL PROPERTY.

1. In construing a statute every possible presumption is in favor of its validity, and this continues until the contrary is shown beyond a rational doubt.
2. The Indians are wards of the nation and the authority to deal with property, set aside for them by agreement with them or otherwise, is vested in Congress.
3. A decree dismissing, upon demurrer, a bill in equity to enjoin the Secretary of the Interior from carrying into effect certain provisions of the act of Congress of June 27, 1902, amending "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians," etc., affirmed.

No. 1465. Decided March, 1905.

APPEAL by complainants from a decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in Equity, No. 24,330, dismissing a bill for an injunction. Affirmed.

Mr. Tracy L. Jeffords for the appellant.

Mr. F. L. Campbell and Mr. W. C. Pollock for the appellee.

Mr. Justice DUELL delivered the opinion of the Court:

This appeal was taken from a decree in equity wherein the court below, after hearing the case upon the bill of complaint and demurrer thereto, refused to enjoin the appellee from carrying out certain provisions of the act of Congress of June 27, 1902, entitled, "An act to amend an act entitled an act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," and also refusing to require the appellee to complete the execution of an alleged trust and make an account thereunder, as set forth in an act of Congress approved January 14, 1889, entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota."

The facts material to a decision herein, as they appear by the bill and the voluminous exhibits referred to in or made a part of the bill, are substantially these:

Appellant, a chief of one of the bands or tribes of Chippewa Indians, being a citizen of the United States, brings the suit for his own benefit and for that of all other members of the tribes or bands of the Chippewas. No express authority to act for parties other than himself is shown by the bill. The ground of the suit is the claimed unconstitutionality of the act of June 27, 1902.

The Chippewa Indians at one time claimed a right to a large section of country under what has been termed the "ordinary Indian right," and defined to be simply the right of occupancy, the fee remaining in the United States. The complainant and the band of Indians to which he belongs resided in the State of Minnesota, and kept up and maintained their tribal and band relations as Indian bands and tribes, and occupied certain lands and reservations in the State at the time of the passage of the act of Congress of January 14, 1889. Negotiations with the Chippewa Indians under said act resulted in the acceptance and ratification of said act by the Chippewa Indians, and their cessation and relinquishment and conveyance to the United States of all their right, title, and interest in the reservation mentioned in said act. Copies of the agreement relating to said conveyances are made a part of the bill. It was provided by the act of 1889 that to complete the extinguishment of the right and title of the said bands and tribes to the said lands that the conveyances thereof should be approved by the President of the United States. In due time, and after due consideration, the President approved the agreements and notified the Senate and House of Representatives of such approval, as shown by a copy of his message, which is made a part of the bill. By these acts the Chippewa Indians conveyed to the United States of America their right to upwards of 3,555,771 acres, constituting the various reservations. These lands so conveyed were held by the United States in trust for the purpose and upon the conditions stated and expressed in said act. Pursuant to the provisions of the act, the Secretary of the Interior proceeded to examine and classify the lands and approximately 1,500,000 acres thereof were classified as pine lands and 1,855,000 acres were classified as agricultural lands; 600,000 acres of land classified as pine lands were situated in the section known as the reservations of the Chippewas of the Mississippi, Leech Lake, Cass Lake, and Lake Winibigoshish. Upon the last-mentioned land there was standing and growing a large amount of merchantable pine timber alleged to be of the value of $10,000,000. The land classified as agricultural land, which was to be sold at $1.25 per acre, was valued at $2,318,750.

The terms and conditions of the trust which complainant insists the Chippewa Indians have the right to have completely executed arise out of the provisions of the act which provides among other things for the sale of certain of the lands and payment into the Treasury of the United States of the proceeds thereof. The sums so received to draw interest at the rate of 5 per centum per annum payable annually for fifty years, and the interest moneys were to be expended for the benefit of all the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, as set forth in the act. At the expiration of the fifty years the principal sum, less any amount advanced for the purpose of promoting civilization and self-support among said Indians, was to be paid to them.

It is further alleged that when the act of Congress of June 27, 1902, became a law the trust was only partially executed, as only part of the agricultural and pine lands had been disposed of under the act of January 14, 1889, there remaining undisposed of some 600,000 acres of pine land and some 200,000 acres of agricultural land, the former being alleged to be worth $1.25 an acre. The bill further alleges that without the consent of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, or any of them, and in derogation of their rights and in contravention of the terms of the trust, the act of 1902 in question was passed, and it provided, among other things, for the setting aside of a part of the pine lands then unsold as a perpetual forest reserve and for restricting the sale of the remaining timber on the reservations, so as to make the same of no value to the Indians; that the value of the lands already actually set aside or authorized to be set aside by the Secretary of the Interior as a perpetual forest reserve are of the value of at least $3,000,000; that the Secretary of the Interior has prescribed rules and regulations for the cutting of timber upon many acres of pine land adjoining the portion set aside for a forest reserve, and that the carrying out of said rules and regulations will reduce the saleable value of such pine timber more than $1,000,000, which sum will be taken out of the trust fund and it will be diminished thereby to that extent. It is alleged that the act is in violation of the trust contained in the act of 1889 under which the lands were conveyed to the United States; that the act is in violation of the trust and in direct conflict and violation of Article V of the Constitution of the United States in that it deprives the complainant and each and all of the Chippewa Indians of the State of Minnesota of their property without compensation and without due process of law, and the said last-mentioned act is unconstitutional and absolutely void.

To the bill of complaint the appellee interposed a demurrer setting forth these grounds:

"1. That there is a defect of parties complainant.

"2. That the bill is bad in substance, in that it does not set out any facts sufficient to entitle the complainant or the real party in interest, the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, to the relief prayed for or to any relief.

"3. That the court has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit."

Admitting all the facts set forth in the complaint, which are well and sufficiently pleaded, to be true, and remembering that any allegations as to the construction of the statutes or documentary exhibits referred to therein are not admitted by the demurrer to be correctly alleged, being a matter of law for the determination of the court, we are called upon to examine the case as presented by the pleadings and see whether anything is presented that differentiates this from other similar cases that have heretofore been decided adversely to the contentions of the appellant.

We are met at the very outset by authoritative decisions of the court of last resort laying down a general rule by which the courts are to be governed when they are asked to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional and enjoin the executive officers from administering it. As has been said, "every possible presumption is in favor of the validity of the statute, and this continues until the contrary is shown beyond a rational doubt." Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 700; Fletcher & Peck, 6 Cranch, 87.

In the class of cases to which the case at bar belongs we have to bear in mind that it has been most conclusively settled that the Government dealings with the Indians are in their nature political, and that there is consequently little or no room left for the interposition of the courts. We can not presume that the Executive Department of the Government acted in bad faith in enacting the act of June 27, 1902, or that either Congress or the President exercised anything but their best judgment in providing for a forestry reserve, and placing limitations upon the cutting of timber upon the pine lands in question. In short, that the act of June 27, 1902, was for the benefit of the Indians, bearing in mind the long term referred to in the act of 1889. But however this may be, we fail to discover anything which takes this case out of the general rule laid down in prior decisions of the Supreme Court. Long Wolf v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 553, and Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 294. In the former case the complainants, claiming due authorization from their tribe, sought to enjoin the defendant, as Secretary of the Interior, from carrying out an alleged unconstitutional act of Congress, the claim of unconstitutionality being that the Indians were deprived of valuable property rights without their consent and to their great injury. The claims are analogous to those made in this proceeding. The court there said:

. . . "Indeed, the controversy which this case presents is concluded by the decision in Cherokee Nation v. Hitchcock, 187 U. S. 294, decided at this term, where it was held that full administrative power was possessed by Congress over Indian tribal property. In effect, the action of Congress now complained of was but an exercise of such power, a mere change in the form of investment of Indian tribal property, the property of those who, as we have held, were in substantial effect the wards of the Government. We must presume that Congress acted in perfect good faith in the dealings with the Indians of which complaint is made, and that the legislative branch of the Government exercised its best judgment in the premises. In any event, as Congress possessed full power in the matter, the judiciary can not question or inquire into the motives which prompted the enactment of this legislation. If injury was occasioned, which we do not wish to be understood as implying, by the use made by Congress of its power, relief must be sought by an appeal to that body for redress and not to the courts. The legislation in question was constitutional, and the demurrer to the bill was therefore rightly sustained."

It having been repeatedly held that the Indians are wards of the nation, the authority to deal with property set aside for them by agreement with them, or otherwise, is vested in Congress, and this authority having been so frequently recognized by the Supreme Court, is no longer open for discussion.

In whatever way the lands in question may be dealt with by Congress, so long certainly as the proceeds derived from them are set aside for the Indian beneficiaries, it is not open for the courts to interfere with congressional action, even though it may be thought that some other disposition of the lands would be more beneficial. We fail to see how any property is taken from the Indians by the act of June 27, 1902. The act only deals with the method of treating the lands, which, together with all avails therefrom, remain the property of the Indians. Even though it be held that the withholding of a portion of the lands from sale be considered a taking from the Indians of property, set aside for their benefit by the act of 1889, Congress has often exercised such authority and the courts have recognized the right of the Government so to do. Missouri, Kansas, and Texas Ry. Co. v. Roberts, 152 U. S. 114; Spaulding v. Chandler, 160 U. S. 394; Cherokee Tobacco case, 11 Wall. 616.

The existence of power in Congress to deal with tribal property having been so frequently recognized by the courts for the reason that the power is political and administrative, it would be a work of supererogation to amplify by argument, or citation of authorities, our reasons for believing that the second ground of demurrer is well taken. Nor do we deem it necessary to pass upon either of the other grounds of demurrer.

It follows that the action of the court below in dismissing the bill was correct, and its decree is therefore affirmed, with costs.

A carrier of live stock is held, in Bosley v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (W. Va.), 66 L. R. A. 871, not to be able to exempt itself from liability for loss caused by delay in transportation occasioned by the negligence or misfeasance of itself or its servants, by a contract with the shipper providing that, in case of any unusual detention of the live stock caused by the negligence of the carrier or its servants or connecting carriers, the shipper should accept as full compensation the amount actually expended by him in the purchase of food and water for the stock while so detained.

A railroad company is held, in Allen v. Northern P. R. Co. (Wash.), 66 L. R. A. 804, not to be bound to warn passengers who left its cars while being ferried across a river of the danger of attempting to reenter them after the train has begun to move at a point where it is necessary suddenly to increase the speed to give momentum to ascend the incline to the land.

A purchaser who buys land subject to a wife's contingent dower right is held, in Bassell v. Caywood (W. Va.), 66 L. R. A. 880, to assume the risk thereof, and not to be entitled to have the same charged up to, or set off against, the purchase price.

The precipitation of one riding in a vehicle drawn by a horse into a stream crossing a highway at a place where a bridge is open and unguarded, after the horse has traveled 60 to 80 feet after being frightened, during which time the driver is struggling to master him, is held, in Ehleiter v. Milwaukee (Wis.), 66 L. R. A. 915, not to be within the exception to the rule that a municipal corporation is not liable for injuries caused by defects in the streets if the injured person was brought into contact with the defect by the running away of a horse, which permits a recovery in case the loss of control of the horse was only momentary.

The right of an ancillary administrator, who has been compelled to pay a debt against the estate after he has, in ignorance thereof, turned over the assets in his hands to the principal administrator, to proceed against one only of the distributees for reimbursement, is sustained, in McClung v. Sieg (W. Va.), 66 L. R. A. 884, where the distributees are all non-residents and she is the only one who has property within the State subject to the jurisdiction of the court

As between successive assignments of a fund in the hands of a third person, the one which, being acquired without notice of prior ones, is first brought to the knowledge of the depositary, is held in Re Phillips (Pa.), 66 L. R. A. 760, to be entitled to priority. Priority rights of different assignees of fund in hands of third person is the subject of a note to this case.

Criticism of the manner in which trials are conducted in court is held, in Ex parte Green (Tex. Crim. App.), 66 L. R. A. 727, not to be punishable as a contempt of the court, unless it refers to some particular case pending before the court.

A real estate broker is held, in Cadigan v. Crabtree (Mass.), 66 L. R. A. 982, not to be entitled to a commission, where, after having produced a customer willing to negotiate for the lease which he was employed to effect, the principal in good faith decides not to lease, terminates the negotiation, and discharges the broker, although the principal subsequently again decides to lease and makes a contract with the customer produced by the broker.

COURT OF APPEALS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA:
Ichataro Morimura et al., appellants, v. Mansour Samaha 258
Georgetown and Tennallytown Railway Company, appellant, v. Elizabeth B. Smith, administratrix 261
Legal Notices 267

Liability of Master for Failure to Employ Competent Servants.

The liability of a railway company to a servant for its failure to employ competent, and to discharge incompetent, fellow servants, is elaborately discussed in the opinion of the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, in the case of Southern Pacific Company v. Hatzer, 135 Fed. 272. The opinion is by Circuit Judge Sanborn, and merits a careful perusal by all lawyers. The points decided are stated in the syllabus to the report of the case as follows:

It is the duty of the master to exercise reasonable care to employ competent servants, and when he has exercised this care this duty is discharged.

Another duty of the master is to discharge a servant when he knows, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence would have known, that the servant had contracted the habit or character of negligence, of drunkenness, or of lack of skill, so that he is incompetent.

The diligence required of the master to learn the habits or characters of servants employed with due care is not of that degree demanded in his employment of servants, or in his inspection of machinery, because careful and skillful men grow more careful and skillful, and the legal presumption is that servants once competent continue so. The master may rely upon the presumption of competency until he has notice or knowledge to the contrary.

The reasonable diligence and care which the master is required to exercise here is not that high degree of care which a prudent business man would use if the want of it endangered his own person. It is that degree of care which prudent railway officials exercise, under like circumstances; that care which such officials charged with the duty of discharging servants employed with due care commonly exercise as soon as they know, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence would know, that such servants have become incompetent.

After proof of the incompetence of a servant, his general reputation among those acquainted with him or his work is competent to prove notice of the habit of incompetence to the master. But reputation among a particular class, which obviously includes but a part of those who knew his character or work, is inadmissible for this purpose.

Servants assume the risk of the occasional acts of negligence of their fellow servants, and the master is not liable for them, but the servants may by notice cast the risk of the habitual negligence of their coemployees upon the master.

Evidence of specific acts of negligence known to the master, and of acts of negligence like those which cause the death of passengers, so notorious that the master must have known of them if he exercised reasonable diligence, is admissible to prove the habit or character for incompetence of a servant who is employed with due care.

Specific acts of negligence, of drunkenness, of lack of skill, or of incompetence, of which the master had no notice, are inadmissible to prove the incompetence of a servant employed with due care. The proper proof of habit and character, as of reputation, in such a case, is the testimony of witnesses qualified to speak of them, subject to proper cross-examination relative to the facts upon which their testimony is based.

Amendment to Rule 6 of Rules of Justices of the Peace.

The following amendment to Rule 6 of Rules of Practice before Justices of the Peace was promulgated by the Supreme Court of the District, in general term, on Thursday, April 20, 1905:

"Ordered that Rule No. 6 of the Rules of Practice before Justices of the Peace in the District of Columbia, promulgated June 23, 1903, be, and hereby is, amended by adding thereto the following additional sections:

"'2. When both parties to a landlord and tenant suit are absent at the time set for trial, the justice shall hold the case until the close of office hours on that day, when, if neither party appears, the suit shall be discontinued at the cost of the plaintiff.

"'3. A suit involving both the right of possession of real property and a claim for money for rent under section 996 of the Code shall be subject to the provisions of this rule.'"

Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

ICHITARO MORIMURA ET AL., APPELLANTS,
v.
MANSOUR SAMAHA.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES; KNOWLEDGE OF FRAUD BY VENDEE; NOTICE; ATTACHMENT AND GARNISHMENT; COUNSEL FEES TO GARNISHEE.

1. Where a sale has been made by the vendor with intent to defraud creditors the burden is upon the purchaser to prove that he actually paid the consideration named in the contract of sale, and in addition thereto he must have had no previous notice of the fraudulent intent of the vendor.
2. The burden is upon creditors attacking the sale to show, by evidence direct or circumstantial, that the purchaser had such notice.
3. It is not necessary in such case, in order to constitute bad faith on the part of the purchaser, who may have paid a valuable consideration, that he either actually participated in the scheme to defraud or had actual knowledge of the fraudulent intent of his vendor; but bad faith may exist where the facts and circumstances of the transaction are such as to put him upon inquiry.
4. A purchaser from a fraudulent vendor is put upon inquiry where he has knowledge of facts and circumstances reasonably sufficient to excite the suspicions of a man of ordinary prudence and business capacity as to the purpose and intent of his vendor, which, if inquired into with ordinary diligence, would lead to the discovery of that purpose and intent. In such a case his situation is not different in law from that of one who is shown to have had direct and certain knowledge; and it is not required that he shall wilfully abstain from making inquiry to avoid having notice.
5. The refusal of an instruction requested by the creditors, correctly stating the above principles, held error.
6. Section 473, Code D. C., providing that in proceedings by attachment and garnishment, where the judgment is in favor of the garnishee, he shall be allowed a reasonable counsel fee, held valid.
7. What is a reasonable fee in a particular case is a matter within the discretion of the court, and its exercise of that discretion will not be reviewed except where palpably abused.

No. 1451. Decided March 8, 1905.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at Law, No. 46,633, in favor of the claimant in a proceeding by attachment and garnishment. Reversed.

Mr. C. C. Tucker, Mr. J. Miller Kenyon, and Mr. H. W. Sohon for the appellants.

Mr. J. H. Ralston, Mr. F. L. Siddons, and Mr. Eugene A. Jones for the appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice SHEPARD delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is an appeal from a judgment rendered in favor of the claimant in a proceeding by attachment and garnishment.

Haggar Brothers and Daavid Company had been engaged in business in the city of Washington as dealers in oriental goods, etc. On November 30, 1903, they were indebted to various merchants in the city of New York in about the sum of $11,392 for merchandise sold and delivered between October 15 and November 27, 1903. Twenty-two deliveries were made between November 1 and November 27. Credits had been given for 30 and 60 days, and the bills were not due until after November 30, 1903. On that day Haggar Brothers and Daavid Company sold their stock in bulk to Mansour Samaha. A written assignment was made on that date reciting a consideration of $10,679.60 in hand paid. This instrument was recorded, but the inventory attached when produced on the trial was not. This inventory is general in its descriptions of the articles contained in the stock. Many items are included in one entry, of which the following is an example: "676 pieces of Japanese china, Austrian, German and French china, terra cotta figures Deutch and R. Etzuma—$559.75."

Prior to this transfer Haggar Bros. and Daavid Co. had been selling goods daily at auction. On December 4, 1903, they addressed the following letter to one of their creditors:

"Gentlemen: We regret to have to inform you that owing to losses incident to an unusually dull season and unexpected heavy expenses, we have been compelled to discontinue our business. We endeavored very earnestly to continue, but lack of capital, with the losses suffered, rendered this impossible. An opportunity presented itself to us to sell out what was left of the stock and business, and this we did to Mansour Samaha, of this city, who has taken possession of the property, our bill of sale to him having been recorded a few days since.

"We are at this time unable to discharge our indebtedness to you, but we expect to resume business in February next, when we shall receive, we believe, capital sufficient to permit us to do this. About that time we hope to commence to pay the debtors that we now owe, and liquidate them in full as rapidly as the means at our disposal will permit.

"In conclusion, we trust that you will be patient with us, and accept our assurance that it is our very sincere desire to get rid of all of our obligations as soon as it is possible to do so. In the meantime, we suggest, nothing could be gained by suing us, and indeed if that were done, it would embarrass very much our expected resumption of business in February next.

"Truly yours,
"HAGGAR BROS. & DAAVID CO.
"Per N. E. HAGGAR.
"S. E. HAGGAR.
"F. S. G. DAAVID."

On December 9, 1903, Morimura Brothers began an action of assumpsit against Haggar Bros. and Daavid Company in the Supreme Court of this District, their particulars of demand showing bills for merchandise sold and delivered amounting in the aggregate to $875.79. A writ of attachment was sued out on the same day and sufficient of the goods in the hands of Samaha to satisfy the demand and costs were seized thereunder. The writ further commanded the marshal to notify any person, other than defendants, who might be in possession, to appear and show cause why the property should not be condemned.

Notice in garnishment was also served upon Samaha to show cause, etc., and to answer the ordinary interrogatories, two in number, propounded to him as garnishee. On December 11, 1903, Samaha filed a sworn petition in the cause alleging the seizure of the goods and setting up title thereto. He alleged the purchase and assignment made on November 30 for the sum of $10,679.60, and that at the time of making the same and paying the money he had "no notice, either actual, constructive, express or implied," of the existence of any claims against his vendors and so forth. This petition was also prayed to be taken as answer to the interrogatories that had been propounded to him. Plaintiffs joined issue on the petition and asked for trial by jury. December 15, 1903, the attached property was delivered to Samaha upon the execution of a bond in due form. On December 10, 1903, A. and M. Karagheusian began a similar action against Haggar Bros. and Daavid Company to recover $1,767.55, in which like proceedings were had. The two cases were tried together on February 10, 1904, and resulted in a verdict for the claimant Samaha. The court overruled motions for new trial and entered judgment for Samaha in each case, discharging the property seized with costs, and an allowance of $150 as reasonable counsel fees.

Each plaintiff appealed from the judgment separately rendered, and both appeals have been argued and submitted together.

1. The first questions arise on exceptions taken by the appellants to the exclusion of evidence and will be considered together.

It appears from Samaha's testimony that he was engaged in business as a dealer in rugs and other Oriental goods in a small store on Fourteenth street, about 14 by 30 feet in floor dimension, with a stock of the average value during the season of between $5,000 and $6,000. That he had a stock between $15,000 and $16,000 in value at Atlantic City; that Haggar Brothers and Daavid Company proposed to sell their entire stock at 1110 F street N. W., to him about November 23, 1903; that he examined the stock, made an inventory, and concluded the purchase for the sum of $10,679.60, which he paid in cash, turning over bills for that amount; that he had the money in a small safe in his store which cost $40; that he was in the habit of keeping his money in the safe, but had small accounts for convenience with two banks in the city; that $4,000 of this money had been obtained from one Maloof in New York, on the 10th day of November, 1903; that he went to New York to attend a large rug sale which was advertised for cash; that he asked Maloof to lend him $4,000, who got the money from his bank and delivered it to him. That he gave Maloof his note for it without security. That he purchased a lot of goods and offered the cash, but the seller told him his credit was good and billed them to him on a credit of 60 days. That as he had to pay interest to Maloof anyhow, he brought the money home and deposited it in the safe. That he used it in paying Haggar Bros. and Daavid Company. After the attachment he delivered some of these goods and some of his own to Maloof in payment of the said note. The claimant, to whom had been assigned the position of plaintiff on the trial, rested his case on his own testimony. As tending to show that Maloof could not have advanced $4,000 in cash to Samaha as alleged, the creditors offered a transcript of proceedings in a court of New York, showing an action against Maloof by one Zainey to recover $2,100, begun May 15, 1902, in which judgment had been rendered for $2,205.40 on March 6, 1903. The transcript showed also the examination of Maloof in supplementary proceedings under the New York practice, which examination continued from time to time to November 30, 1903. Under this examination Maloof denied having any property or an interest in the N. N. Maloof Company, of which he was treasurer, and stated that he owned one share of stock in said corporation of $100 par value which had been hypothecated for a loan of $90, and that he was then an employee of said company receiving a salary for his services. The court excluded the record on the objection of the claimant, to which the creditors excepted.

N. N. Maloof was introduced as a witness for claimant in rebuttal. He testified to the delivery to Samaha of the $4,000 in New York on November 10, 1903. The money came from the corporation of which Maloof was treasurer. Maloof drew a check on the Fulton National Bank in favor of bearer for $4,000 and signed the same as treasurer. The check was produced and shows the word treasurer in very small print after the signature of Maloof. It was indorsed N. N. Maloof & Co., N. N. Maloof, treasurer, and W. P. Maloof; that he cashed the check and delivered the cash to Samaha for his rug purchase; that there was more money in bank than this; that the loan was made to Samaha, who was a good man and in good credit, and that his business was to give money "to make interest better than selling goods. Interest can be seven or eight per cent, and make something more by my commission."

Counsel for the creditors then proposed to ask witness some questions concerning his statement as being a stockholder in the N. N. Maloof Co., but were interrupted by an objection offered by the claimant to the effect that the loan had been made by the Maloof Company and the supplemental proceedings related to the witness personally. Counsel for the creditors then said: "I purpose showing by this record that this man testified in these proceedings that he had one share of stock of the par value of $100 in that company; that he had hypothecated to Mr. Macksuld, an officer of the company, for $90. I further purpose to show by this deposition that he was simply an employee of that company and had no other interest in it but this one share of stock, and that his story that he loaned $4,000 of this company's money, or promised to loan it, without consulting any of the other officers of the company, is a mere fabrication." The transcript was then offered, again excluded, and exception noted.

There was no error in excluding this transcript upon the occasion of either offer. There is no rule of evidence or exception to any such rule that would warrant its admission as original evidence.

The only proper use that could be made of it would be in the cross-examination of Maloof. As the fact of the advance of the $4,000 to Samaha had been made by him of great materiality in the determination of his claim as an innocent purchaser for value, considerable latitude in the cross-examination of Maloof would be permissible in order to determine its truth or falsity. His connection with the Maloof Company, his interest therein, his authority to loan its money without the advice and consent of other officers, and kindred matters might properly be inquired into. Sonnentheil v. Lyon, 172 U. S. 401, 410. As said by Mr. Justice Brown in that case: "Parties contemplating a fraud frequently pursue such devious courses to conceal their designs, and resort to such subtle practices to mislead their unsecured creditors, that the fraud becomes impossible to detect, unless the door be swung wide open for the admission of all testimony having any possible bearing upon the question. Facts which to the court might seem of no pertinence and be rejected as having no legal tendency to show knowledge of the fraud, might be considered by the jury as significant and indicative of a guilty participation. Even negative evidence may sometimes have a positive value." If a statement of importance in this view could be contradicted by one made in his former examination, after his attention had been directly called to it, then so much of the transcript as would establish that contradiction would be admissible to impeach the witnesses' credibility, but for no other purpose.

It would seem that the purpose of the counsel for the creditors was to proceed in that way, until interrupted by the objection, but as his question was not completed, so far as the bill of exception discloses, we have nothing before us by which to determine its admissibility. Shauer v. Alterton, 151 U. S. 607, 616.

2. That Haggar Bros. & Daavid Co. made the sale to Samaha with the intent to defraud their many creditors the jury could have had no reasonable doubt. The thing for them to ascertain from the evidence was whether Samaha made the purchase in good faith. To show purchase in good faith the burden was upon him to prove that he actually paid the consideration named in the contract of sale. In addition thereto he must have had no previous notice of the fraudulent intent of his vendors. Upon this proposition the presumption was in his favor, and the burden devolved upon the creditors to show, by evidence direct or circumstantial, that he had such notice. Jones v. Simpson, 116 U. S. 609, 614.

For the guidance of the jury in determining these simple issues three special instructions were given to the jury at the request of the claimant, and eighteen were requested by the creditors, five of which were granted and thirteen refused.

It is unnecessary to consider these in detail. Of those given to the jury in application to the evidence relating to the payment of the consideration, it is sufficient to say that they do not appear to be objectionable. Where a sale has been made by the vendor with the intent to defraud creditors it is not necessary to constitute bad faith in the purchaser, who may have paid a valuable consideration, that he either actually participated in the scheme to defraud or had actual knowledge of the fraudulent intent of his vendor. Bad faith may exist where the facts and circumstances of the transaction are such as to put him upon inquiry. Jones v. Simpson, 116 U. S. 609, 614; Schauer v. Alterton, 151 U. S. 607, 622; Sonnenthiel v. Morelein Brewing Co., 172 U. S. 401, 413; Humphries v. Freeman, 22 Tex. 45, 50; Walt Fraud Con. (2 ed.) sections 379, 380; Bump Fraud Con. (4 ed.) sec. 184.

A purchaser from a fraudulent vendor, as in other cases of purchasers of defective titles, is put upon inquiry where he has knowledge of facts and circumstances reasonably sufficient to excite the suspicions of a man of ordinary prudence and business capacity as to the purpose and intent of his vendor, which, if inquired into with ordinary diligence, would lead to the discovery of that purpose and intent. In such a case his situation is not different in law from that of one who is shown to have had direct and certain knowledge. Bump Fraud Con. (4 ed.) section 184, and cases cited; Wood v. Carpenter, 101 U. S. 135, 141; Manogue v. Bryant, 15 App. D. C. 245, 261: 27 Wash. Law Rep. 478.

The third special instruction requested by the creditors correctly stated this principle for the information of the jury and ought to have been given or embodied in the general charge.

After its refusal the court read the statute relating to fraudulent conveyances and then charged the jury as follows:

"As to what is meant by the words 'previous notice' in our statute must be largely for the consideration of the jury, as a matter of fact. The words are plain and a judicial definition can not be of great aid for a jury of ordinary intelligence in the use of the English language. If Samaha knew that said debtors, Hagar Brothers & Daavid Company did actually intend to hinder, delay, or defraud their creditors, by making said sale, then he had notice, no matter how he obtained such knowledge; and if he was notified of any fact exciting suspicion and which would necessarily make him conscious of having the means of knowledge of such intent within his reach by making inquiry, and he should wilfully abstain from making such inquiry to avoid having notice, he must be held to have notice because of such fact and such conscious knowledge of the means of information."

This was an incorrect statement of the law. As before pointed out, all that is required is that the surrounding facts and circumstances shall be reasonably sufficient to excite the suspicions of a person of ordinary care and business capacity, and prompt an inquiry, which, if prosecuted with reasonable diligence in view of all the circumstances, would naturally lead to the discovery of the fraudulent intent of the vendor. It is not required that he shall "wilfully abstain from making such inquiry to avoid having notice."

3. The last question for consideration arises on error assigned upon exceptions taken to the allowance by the court of the sum of $150 in each case as the reasonable counsel fee of the garnishee.

Section 470 of the Code permits the levy of an attachment in actions by creditors upon property in the hands of the "alleged fraudulent assignee or transferree, as a garnishee." Section 472 provides that if the levy shall not be set aside, the garnishee may plead that he was a bona fide purchaser without notice of any fraud on the part of the defendant, and said plea shall make an issue to be tried by the court or by the jury if either party desires it. See section 460. Section 473 provides that: "If said issue is found in favor of the said garnishee, judgment shall be rendered in his favor for his costs and a reasonable counsel fee."

We can not agree with the appellants that this provision is beyond the power of Congress to enact. The Code provides a special remedy by attachment, on behalf of creditors in such cases, before their claims accrue due, which is coupled with the condition aforesaid. If parties avail themselves of the remedy they must do it subject to the condition.

The amount of the fee must be reasonable; that is to say, determinable by the facts and circumstances of the case.

What is a reasonable fee in a particular case of the kind is a matter within the discretion of the court, and the exercise of that discretion will not be reviewed except where palpably abused.

For the reasons heretofore given, the judgment will be reversed with costs, and the cause remanded with direction to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial. It is so ordered.

Reversed.

GEORGETOWN AND TENNALLYTOWN RAILWAY COMPANY, APPELLANT, v. ELIZABETH B. SMITH, ADMINISTRATRIX.

PRACTICE; CARRIERS; NEGLIGENCE; CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE; INSTRUCTIONS.

1. An objection that the trial court erred in refusing to direct a verdict for defendant because, having directed a verdict in favor of one of two defendants, there was a defect in the pleadings, urged for the first time on appeal, comes too late, even were the objection available to the defendant had it been taken in proper form and time.
2. Whether a passenger on a street car injured by reason of the protrusion of his arm from the car is guilty of contributory negligence, is a question of fact for the jury, and not a question of law for the court.
3. It is gross negligence for a street railway company to use cars which almost touch as they pass each other, and it is doubly negligent for it to run such cars with a running rail placed where passengers would naturally rest their arms. Under such circumstances it is the duty of the company, at the very least, to see that one of the cars comes to a full stop and that the other passes very slowly.
4. In an action for wrongful death, it appeared the cars of defendant company, when alongside each other, were less than three inches apart, and when in motion were apt to come into contact. Deceased was sitting with his arm resting on the running rail of the car, and as a car passed on the other track he was caught between the cars, pulled out of the one in which he was riding, and killed. Held, that an instruction that if deceased extended his arm beyond the outer edge of the car to such an extent that he was struck by the car coming in the opposite direction, and that but for such action on his part the accident would not have happened, the defendant was not liable, was properly refused.
5. Danger of being hit by a passing car is not such a peril as a passenger on a street car is bound to anticipate.
6. A requested instruction, that if the jury found the deceased had been in the habit of passing over defendant's road at the place of the accident that would justify an inference that he had knowledge of the space between the cars, was properly refused.
7. It is the duty of a common carrier of passengers in street cars to construct its railroad and to use such equipment as will not endanger the safety of its passengers.
8. The charge of the trial court should be taken as a whole, and when fair an appellate court should not labor to sustain an objection based upon a sentence which, taken by itself, may not express in the happiest terms a proposition which is correct.
9. The charge of the trial court in the present case held eminently fair to defendant.

No. 1444. Decided March 7, 1905.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at Law, No. 45,257, entered upon a verdict for plaintiff in an action for death by wrongful act. Reversed.

Mr. J. J. Darlington, Mr. C. C. Cole, and Mr. B. W. Parker for the appellant.

Mr. C. A. Douglass, Mr. E. S. Douglass, and Mr. Levi H. David for the appellee.

Mr. Justice DUELL delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is an appeal from a judgment entered upon the verdict of the jury in favor of the appellee, the plaintiff below, for the sum of $9,000, with interest from January 22, 1904, and for costs.

The suit was brought to recover the sum of $10,000, damages accruing by reason of the negligence of the defendant, which resulted in the death of plaintiff's husband. In the suit as originally brought, the District of Columbia was made a codefendant, but the court directed a verdict in its favor and the railway company then became sole defendant. The facts pertinent to the case are these:

The deceased, Peter A. Smith, was the husband of the appellee and left also surviving him five children, the youngest a little over 3 years and the oldest not quite 19 years of age. The accident causing his death occurred on the night of July 1, 1901. The deceased, a carpenter by trade, was a passenger on one of defendant's cars, and was on his way from Washington to his home at Tennallytown. The car was what is known as a "panel" car; that is, one which could be used as a closed car in winter and an open car in summer by the removal of the panels in the sides of the car. When these panels are out there is an opening from the floor almost to the top of the car. Upright posts between each seat hold the panels in place when they are used and provide a support for a running rail along the sides of the car, which is so placed that when the passengers are sitting down their arms rest comfortably upon the running rod. He occupied the last seat on the left-hand side of the car which was going north and was sitting with his head back against the car and his arm resting on the running rail. The car crossed M street, going up Thirty-second street, and when it arrived at Prospect street, which runs on a parallel line with M street, and where there is a slight bend in the road, it passed a car coming in the opposite direction. The deceased was caught between the cars and drawn out of the one in which he was seated, and when the car had passed he was lying dead between the tracks. As is usual when such an accident occurs, there is more or less conflict in the testimony as to how the accident occurred and what transpired just before and just after it. After the accident the cars were pushed back so that they were alongside each other, and the distance was measured between these uprights on each car and was between two and one-half and three inches. The space between the bolts that held the running bar was not more than two and one-half inches. These large cars had been operated on the line from six to twelve months prior to the accident.

Charles H. Williams, a witness called on behalf of plaintiff, thus describes the accident:

Digitized by Google

That when the car got to Prospect street witness heard a great commotion; that Prospect street runs on a parallel line with M street, and from 150 to 200 feet from M street, and runs from Thirty-second street west toward the University; that it does not cross Thirty-second street; that witness heard a great commotion and clanging of bells on the car coming from the north going towards the starting place, or station; that the road has double tracks; that Thirty-second street is of medium width; it is a narrow street; it is called a narrow street; that just as you get to Prospect street there is a slight bend in the road; that just as the car came around the curve he heard a crash, and he saw the body of deceased going out of the window or out of the panel; that the gong he heard sounded was one of the foot gongs on the front platforms of all the cars; that it appeared to witness that the noise and all the commotion was from the platform of the car coming from Tennallytown; that after this ringing of bells neither car came to a full stop until they passed, when the body of the deceased dropped out; that witness did not tell what struck deceased; all that he could see was the man go out of the window; . . . that it pulled him out, and as the cars passed one another something sounded like the crashing and smashing of wood as one was passing the other, until both cars could separate themselves; that witness was on the back platform when he saw the body of deceased drop; that witness can not be positive whether the body went out over or under the guard rail; that the car going south was of the same pattern as the one going north; that it was a large car; does not know what they weigh, but they are immense big cars; both were the same size; that both the cars came to a standstill after the man's body went out; that witness went where the man's body lay; that to the best of his recollection it was on all-fours and appeared to be dead.

On cross-examination the witness testified that when he got on the car deceased's arm was resting on the rail and also extending out over the rail, but he could not tell how far, and his head was resting upon his fingers; that deceased's head was thrown over and back towards the left side, resting upon his fingers or hands; that when he heard the noise or confusion he looked back and saw the body of deceased going out of the space between the two uprights, the one in the rear and the one in front of him; that when he looked around and saw the body going out, it was up on the highest part of the car, above the rail; that part of the body was outside and part inside of the car; that he did not know or see how the body got into that position; that the bell or gong on the south-bound car gave a warning before it reached the north-bound car, and witness heard it make a considerable noise; that about that time the witness heard the conductor on the north-bound car holler "Look out, there;" that the conductor was up in front collecting fares.

Several other witnesses were called by appellee in corroboration and their testimony is in substance the same. It may be added that the testimony clearly shows that the space between these two large cars when they passed on the part of the line where the accident occurred was of not more than two and a half or three inches, and it is evident that the least rocking or swaying of the cars brings them in contact. That this is a dangerous place for these large cars to pass is shown by the testimony of witnesses called for both parties. Defendant's motormen and conductors who were in charge of the two cars at the time of the accident were called as withesses and their testimony, in substance, shows that as a rule the cars were run very slowly at the point where the accident occurred, and that the passengers were warned to keep their arms and hands in. At the time of the acdident the cars were not running rapidly, and the motorman on the south-bound car testified that as his car passed the north-bound car he saw deceased resting his arm on the seat and told him to take it down, and the conductor of the car in which deceased was a passenger testified that he was collecting fares at the front of his car, and called out to the passengers as the cars met to keep their arms inside of the car loud enough for all to hear. It also appears that there were notices posted in the cars to the effect that passengers must keep their arms and bodies on the inside of the lines of the car. The reason given by appellant's employees for warning passengers to take their arms off the rail was because the cars pass so close that it was not safe for passengers to leave their arms on the rail.

There is no proof that the deceased heard any warning, or that if warning was given and heard it was in time to enable him to avoid the danger. Other passengers did not hear any warning given. Mr. Hunt, a passenger on the same car with deceased, testifies that he heard nothing said or done, or any gongs ringing, or any commotion preceding the accident. Mr. McGill, the former register of wills in the District, and a passenger upon the same car, testifies that there was a general ringing and clattering of bells, just about the time this thing occurred, almost simultaneously. Mr. Dixon, who was sitting right behind the deceased on the same side of the car, testifies that the deceased had his arm on the rail, the usual arm rest, and was noticing a little child in front of him; that the deceased had his arm resting on that rail and he did not notice the car come down on the other track. Mr. Harding, motorman of the car on which deceased was riding, testifies that he did not remember whether he rang his gong or not at the time of the accident and that he did not notice whether the motorman of the south-bound car sounded his gong. It will be seen, therefore, that there was more or less conflict of testimony as to what occurred at the time of the accident.

At the close of the evidence the defendant's counsel requested the court to grant, separately and severally, eight instructions to the jury. Five of these were refused and exceptions duly taken. The court then charged the jury, and counsel for defendant excepted, separately and severally, to four paragraphs of the charge. The assignment of errors is based upon the refusals to charge and upon such parts of the charge as were excepted to. The alleged errors will be considered in order.

1. The first error is based upon the refusal of the court to instruct the jury that upon the whole evidence in the case the verdict should be for the defendant. It is insisted that it was error to refuse this instruction, first, because of a fatal defect in the pleadings, and, second, on account of contributory negligence. The first point grows out of the fact that the District of Columbia was joined as a defendant, and that upon motion made the court directed a verdict in its favor which left the railway company the sole defendant. The court commenced his charge to the jury by a statement of this fact, and no objection was made to it, and no exception taken; and the record fails to disclose that the question was raised at all in any way before the trial court. It does not appear that counsel, in asking this instruction, suggested that one of the grounds asked for the direction was that a verdict had been directed for the co-defendant. The objection was not taken in proper form nor in proper time. Perry on Pleading, p. 126; Norman v. U. S., 20 App. D. C. 494: 30 Wash. Law Rep. 810; Gas Light Co. v. Lansden, 9 App. D. C. 508: 24 Wash. Law Rep. 807. Aside from this, we do not think that the objection could avail the appellant had it been taken in proper form and time.

Referring now to the question of contributory negligence as the ground upon which the court erred in not directing a verdict in favor of the defendant, we are clearly of the opinion that there is no force to the contention. When passengers upon railroads operated by steam have received injuries by reason of the protrusion of their arms out of open windows, the courts in considering such cases have differed as to whether such protrusion is, as matter of law, contributory negligence. There has also been some conflict of decisions when the injured persons have been passengers upon street cars, but the weight of authority is that the question of negligence is a question of fact for the jury and not a question of law to be ruled upon by the court.

An instructive decision upon this question is to be found in the dissenting opinion of Judge O'Brien, of the New York Court of Appeals, in Sias v. Rochester Ry. Co., 169 N. Y. 118. The case went off on a question other than that of negligence, in reference to which question a majority of the court expressed no opinion. At page 125, Judge O'Brien said:

"The defendant was engaged in exercising a franchise for the conveyance of the public by operating a railroad in a public street. It had the power and it was its duty to construct the railroad in such a way as not to endanger the safety of the passengers. If it constructed its tracks so close to a tree or any other physical obstruction as to endanger the safety of the traveling public it could have been held to have neglected its duty and to have been wanting in that degree of care and prudence which the law imposed upon it, and so the courts have held in similar cases."

And at page 127 he said: "Nor has this court ever held that it was contributory negligence, as matter of law, for a passenger to protrude his body slightly beyond the side of the street car, but it has held that the conduct of the passenger in such cases, whether negligent or otherwise, is a question for the jury." Many authorities are cited in support of these propositions.

In Elliott v. Newport Str. Co., 18 R. I. 707, a passenger riding on the footboard of a car was hit by the trolley pole, which was ten and one-half inches distant from the outer edge of the footboard, thrown off the car and injured. The court held that on the testimony it could not say, as matter of law, either that the defendant was not negligent, or that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence which contributed to the accident, and that therefore the court was not warranted in directing a verdict for the defendent. In Cummings v. Worcester, etc., Railway, 166 Mass. 220, it was held that a street car passenger, riding with part of his body projecting beyond the line of a car, can not be held, as matter of law, to be guilty of negligence, or to have assumed the risk of contact with things outside of the car, and that these questions are for the jury. See also Powers v. Boston, 154 Mass. 60; Miller v. St. Louis R. R. Co., 5 Mo. Rep. 477; Spencer v. Milwaukee, etc., R. R. Co., 17 Wis. 487; Summers v. Crescent Railway Co., 34 La. Ann. 139: Tucker v. Buffalo R. Co., 53 N. Y. App. Div. 571, affirmed 169 N. Y. 589.

2. Error is predicated upon the refusal of the court to instruct the jury that should they find from the evidence that the deceased exposed or extended his arm or head, or any part of his person, beyond the outer part of the car to such an extent that he was struck by the car passing in the opposite direction, and that but for such action on his part the accident would not have happened, they should find for the defendant. There was no error on the part of the court in refusing to charge this proposition. In Spencer v. Milwaukee, &c., Co., supra, the court pertinently said: "It is probably the habit of every person while riding in the cars, to rest the arm upon the base of the window. If the window is open it is liable to extend slightly outside. This, we suppose, is a common habit. There is always more or less space between the outside of the car and any structure erected by the side of the track, and must necessarily be so to accomodate the motion of the car. Passengers know this and regulate their conduct accordingly. They do not suppose that the agents and managers of the road suffer obstacles to be so placed as barely to miss the cars while passing."

The uncontradicted testimony shows that the space between two of these cars was not more than three inches and it was gross negligence upon the part of the appellant to use cars which almost touched when they passed, and it was doubly negligent for them to run such cars, with the panels taken out, with a running rail placed where the passengers would naturally rest their arms. At the very least, it was the duty of the company to see that one of the cars came to a full stop and that the other passed very slowly, because, as is well known, there is more or less swaying of cars when in motion, and the peril was present whenever two open cars met and the danger was caused by their very close proximity. As was said by the court in Geitz v. Milwaukee City R. Co., 72 Wis. 307: "We suppose it is common knowledge that a car being propelled upon a railroad track will be swayed by the inequalities of the track."

3. This error is based upon the refusal of the court to instruct the jury that if the deceased changed his position after the front of the car had passed him without striking him, and that by such change of position he was struck by the car, the verdict should be for the defendant.

Danger of being hit by a passing car is not such a peril as a passenger on a street car is bound to anticipate, and in the present case if there was the ringing of gongs and the shouting that is asserted by some of the witnesses to have occurred before the deceased was struck, it would be quite natural for him to shift his position, although there is no sufficient evidence to warrant such supposition. A more natural supposition is that if part of the car passed him in safety, that the swaying of the cars brought them closer together and resulted in the relative change of position of the cars rather than in any change in the position of the deceased. There was no error in the refusal to instruct the jury on this point.

4. This error is based upon the refusal of the court to instruct the jury that if they found the deceased had been in the habit of passing over the defendant's road at the place of the accident, that would justify an inference that he had knowledge of the space between the cars. The evidence discloses that these large cars had been in use from six to twelve months, but there is no evidence that would have warranted the jury in finding how frequently he had been a passenger; and even if he had been a daily passenger there would be no inference that he had knowledge of the space between the cars. He might have been on the cars many times without seeing two of these large cars pass at this dangerous point of the line, and even if the cars had passed he might well have been occupied with other matters and not noticed how close together the cars were in passing. As well might a passenger, in order to be free from a charge of contributory negligence, be required to examine the trucks, including the wheels and brakes, the motor, the car body, the track, the competency of the motorman, and everything pertaining to the operation of the line. A common carrier of passengers in street cars can not shift such burdens upon a passenger. It is the duty of such a carrier to construct its railroad and to use such equipment as will not endanger the safety of its passengers. The fallacy of the proposition advanced by this request to charge is so self-evident that authorities are not required in support of our position that the court did not err in refusing to charge as requested.

5. This error is based upon that portion of the charge which states that "the whole question seems to come to the jury to determine whether or not, under the form of car that was used here, with the width of track that was used here, with the style of open car built as it was, and with this rail in the position it was, there was anything this company ought to have done as a prudent and reasonable person to prevent the happening of an accident of this kind."

We do not think there is any force in the objection raised to this portion of the charge. In this connection it may be said that the charge should be taken as a whole, and when that charge is fair an appellate court should not labor to sustain an objection based upon a sentence which, taken by itself, may not express in the happiest terms a proposition which is correct. We think a fair construction to be placed upon the clause objected to is that the court instructed the jury that it was for it to determine whether the company could have done anything in reference to the form of the car used and the space between the tracks which would have prevented the happening of the accident. Reference in the paragraph is made to the "open car" and to the position of the rail, and the court was correct in leaving it to the jury to determine whether such a car and such a rail were proper under all the circumstances of the case as proven by the testimony. We would not be warranted in sustaining this objection or predicating error upon this portion of the charge.

6. Error is charged because the court instructed the jury as follows:

"But notwithstanding that fact, although the plaintiff's intestate may have been clearly at fault and negligent in putting his arm out, or his head, or whatever it was, yet if the defendant did not take such precautions as a prudent and reasonable person ought to take to prevent such an accident, I think the defendant would be liable."

It is claimed that this statement strikes down the entire doctrine of contributory negligence. It is admitted that the court in giving the seventh instruction asked for by appellant told the jury that if the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, he could not recover although the defendant was found guilty of negligence.

We think the charge of the court on the question of contributory negligence was eminently fair. We think that there is nothing to which the appellant can fairly take exception in the charge, or in the refusal to charge, upon the subject of contributory negligence. Contributory negligence in this case is based upon the contention that the deceased's arm was outside the car. The weight of authorities, as we have before stated, is that this is a question for submission to the jury. Charges much more favorable to a plaintiff have been made in this line of cases and sustained by the appellate tribunals. For example, in Tucker v. Buffalo R. Co., supra, it appeared that the plaintiff sat by one of the open windows of the car with his elbow resting upon the window sill, and the evidence tended to show that it was some three inches outside the line of the car. As the car passed another car going in an opposite direction on the switch, the two cars came close to each other. The court charged the jury, in effect, that the plaintiff might recover, although he was riding with his elbow three inches outside the car and although the cars themselves did not actually collide. The appellate court held that there was no error in this charge.

7. The last error is based upon that part of the charge wherein the court said:

"If the plaintiff's intestate was guilty of negligence, and was in a position of apparent peril, and the employees of the defendant company saw that position of apparent peril in time to have prevented the injury, it was their duty, notwithstanding the negligence of the plaintiff's intestate, to do all they could to prevent the accident. If they, in that condition of affairs, failed to exercise due and proper care the plaintiff may still recover.

"I want to make clear to you the other proposition I stated. Notwithstanding the plaintiff's negligence, if the defendant saw that he was in a position of peril by reason of his own negligence, in time to have prevented the accident, and did not do anything that they ought to have done, he could still be allowed to recover, because the direct result of the negligence of the defendant in that case was the cause of the injury. In other words, a man can not run over another if he sees him in a perilous position, provided he can stop before he does run over him. It is the same way with a railroad company. They could not injure this party if they saw he was there in a perilous position, without undertaking to stop their cars or do something to prevent the accident. If those are the facts, as you find them, the plaintiff may recover."

We think that the general proposition laid down in these paragraphs is a correct one, and that the appellant was not harmed by the statements contained therein. In view of the fact that the court left the question of the contributory negligence of the deceased to the jury and by their verdict it found that the deceased was not guilty of any negligence which contributed to the accident, the charge here objected to amounts to nothing. There was, however, we think, evidence which rendered such instruction proper. The motorman of the approaching car testifies in substance that he saw the deceased, and at least one other passenger, with their arms resting on the rail and that he warned them to take them in. In view of this it was for the jury to determine under proper instructions whether everything was done to prevent the accident. It was for the jury to determine whether everything was done to prevent the accident. It was for the jury to determine whether the motorman, seeing the perilous position of the deceased, should not have endeavored to stop his car. We have said that we believe it was negligence on the part of the appellant not to stop one of the cars when two cars were about to pass at the point where the accident occurred. We have carefully considered the entire charge of the court, and have come to the conclusion that it was eminently fair and that the appellant has no good ground for its insistence that in its instructions to the jury, or in its refusal to give additional instructions, any error was committed.

No error having been committed, it follows that the judgment of the court below should be affirmed, with costs, and it is so ordered.

Who Are Passengers?

[New York Law Journal.]

Some time since we called attention to decisions that in street railway cases fixed the actual contact with a car, either by taking hold of the hand rail or placing the foot on the step, as the beginning of the relation of passenger (Duchenin v. Boston El. Ry., 71 N. E. 780, and cases cited). The reason for this rule is that persons usually become passengers in street railway cars in the open street, and there must be some definite act to distinguish a passenger from an ordinary pedestrian.

With regard to steam railroads, as passengers are received only at stations, no specific act or acts can be relied on as a criterion. The general principles are stated in the American and English Encyclopedia of Law (2d ed., vol. V, p. 488 et seq), as follows:

"The relation of carrier and passenger begins when one puts himself in the care of the carrier or directly within its control, with the bona fide intention of becoming a passenger, and is accepted as such by the carrier.

Seldom, however, is there any formal act of delivery of the passenger's person into the care of the carrier, or of acceptance by the carrier of one who presents himself for transportation; hence the existence of the relation is commonly to be implied from the circumstances attendant. The rule is that these circumstances must be such as will warrant an implication that one has offered himself to be carried and that the offer has been accepted by the carrier.

The purchase of a ticket by a person entitling him to travel between two stations creates the relation of carrier and passenger with all the duties imposed by law upon each. But it is not necessary that the ticket should have been purchased from the carrier himself or an authorized agent of the carrier. Nor is it necessary that the ticket be actually paid for at the time of his purchase. Yet the actual purchase of a ticket before entering a train is not always necessary to constitute the relation.

While actual entry into the carrier's vehicle of carriage is not always necessary to create the relation of carrier and passenger, and one may become a passenger before entering the car or before transportation has actually commenced, as when he is waiting in the waiting room to take the train or going from the ticket office to take a seat in the car, yet the fact of entering a carrier's vehicle of transportation in good faith to take passage thereon makes one a passenger. A person, therefore, who by mistake gets upon a passenger train other than the one he intended to take passage on is a passenger upon the train he is on.

The actual payment of fare is not essential to the establishment of the relation of carrier and passenger. Nevertheless, the payment of fare to the proper person and receipt of the same constitute unequivocal evidence of the existence of the relation, and unless the payment is either made or waived the fare must sometime be paid or tendered, though it need not be paid in coin or even in money, for any valuable consideration moving from the person to the railway will render him a paying passenger, nor need the fare be paid by the passenger himself in person."

Cases of doubt, whether a person was or was not a passenger, must, of course, turn upon their peculiar facts. The recent decision of the Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey, in Vandegrift v. West Jersey, etc., R. R. (March, 1905), 60 Atl. 184, is interesting, as the circumstances rendered it debatable of which of two corporations an injured plaintiff was a passenger. The following is the syllabus by the court:

"One of the plaintiffs entered the ferry house of the Philadelphia & Camden Ferry Company at Philadelphia, intending to purchase a ferry ticket of the company. She had at the time a railroad ticket of the defendant, which entitled her to transportation from Philadelphia to Woodbury, including the ferriage from Philadelphia to Camden. She was injured in the ferry house at Philadelphia, while on her way to the ticket office of the ferry company. She used a ferry ticket to pay her fare across the river, left the station, and went to a point in Camden on a business errand, in pursuance of her intention, before the injury was received. She returned to her home by the street railway. The railroad ticket was afterwards used by her husband. She, however, testified at the trial that she intended to use the railroad ticket in order to cross the ferry.

Held, that she was not a passenger of the railroad company at the time of the injury.

The porter whose negligence is said to have caused the plaintiff's injury testified that he was paid by the check of the defendant, but immediately added that he forgot whether it was the railroad or not. There was positive testimony, which was sustained by circumstances, that he was an employee of the ferry company. Held, that his testimony that he was paid by the railroad company was too uncertain to justify the conclusion that he was an employee of the railroad company."

The facts are elaborately discussed in the opinion.

National Bank—Debts—Comptroller.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit held, in the case of Deweese v. Smith, that the decision of the Comptroller of the Currency that it is necessary to collect, and his requisition for, a certain percentage of the liability of the shareholders of a national bank in order to pay its debts, is not a decision that a larger percentage will not be necessary, and that the comptroller has plenary power to make successive assessments until the full liability of the shareholder is exhausted.

Stockholder's Liability—Transfer.

The United States Circuit Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania held in the recent case of The Knickerbocker Trust Company vs. Myers, that a stockholder in a corporation can not avoid his statutory liability to a creditor on account of stock which he sold prior to the creation of the debt where he neglected to have the stock transferred on the books of the company as required by its rules and the terms of his certificate.

Bank; Draft; Collection; Insolvency.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit held, in the case of The Western German Bank v. Norvell, that a bank which, although known by its officers to be insolvent, received a draft for collection without disclosing its insolvency to the owner, collected the same and mingled the proceeds with its own funds, remitting to the owner its own draft, which was not received until after the bank was placed in the hands of a receiver, was guilty of fraud; that the proceeds of the draft, when collected, remained the property of the sender and might be recovered from the receiver where they could be traced into his hands, and that such right was not affected by the fact that the sender gave directions that the remittance should be made in New York exchange, which was done, the exchange being protested and never paid.

The supreme lodge of a mutual benefit society which has authorized its agent, a local lodge, to initiate members into the order, is held, in Mitchell v. Leech (S. C.), 66 L. R. A. 723, to be liable for injuries inflicted upon a candidate by the use of a mechanical goat in the initiation ceremony, although it has not authorized the use of such contrivance.

As between successive assignments of a fund in the hands of a third person, the one which, being acquired without notice of prior ones, is first brought to the knowledge of the depositary, is held in Re Phillips (Pa.), 66 L. R. A. 760, to be entitled to priority. Priority rights of different assignees of fund in hands of third person is the subject of a note to this case.

Criticism of the manner in which trials are conducted in court is held, in Ex parte Green (Tex. Crim. App.), 66 L. R. A. 727, not to be punishable as a contempt of the court, unless it refers to some particular case pending before the court.

A real estate broker is held, in Cadigan v. Crabtree (Mass.), 66 L. R. A. 982, not to be entitled to a commission, where, after having produced a customer willing to negotiate for the lease which he was employed to effect, the principal in good faith decides not to lease, terminates the negotiation, and discharges the broker, although the principal subsequently again decides to lease and makes a contract with the customer produced by the broker.

Holders of stock in a corporation, the property of which has been sold, are held, in Hearst v. Putnam Min. Co. (Utah), 66 L. R. A. 784, to have no right to maintain a suit so enforce a trust in such property for their own benefit on the theory that the directors of the company were guilty of fraud in disposing of it.

The right of an ancillary administrator, who has been compelled to pay a debt against the estate after he has, in ignorance thereof, turned over the assets in his hands to the principal administrator, to proceed against one only of the distributees for reimbursement, is sustained, in McClung v. Sieg (W. Va.), 66 L. R. A. 884, where the distributees are all non-residents and she is the only one who has property within the State subject to the jurisdiction of the court

The use of streets and sidewalks by an individual simply for his own convenience and accommodation is held, in O'Hanlin v. Carter Oil Co. (W. Va.), 66 L. R. A. 893, to be unauthorized and essentially a nuisance, and to make such individual liable for all damages sustained in consequence of the improper appropriation of the street or sidewalk to his own personal use.

In the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

Samuel A. Drury and Samuel Maddox, Substituted Trustees, Complainants, v. The Unknown Heirs, Alienees, and Devisees of William H. Parker, Defendants. In Equity, No. 25,178.

The object of this suit is to declare the title of complainants to lots fifteen (15), twenty-two (22), and twenty-three (23), in James H. Meriwether's subdivision of lots in square numbered three hundred and four (304), in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, as said subdivision is recorded in liber twenty (20), folio one (1), of the records in the office of the surveyor of said District, to be good in fee simple in the complainants by adverse possession. Upon motion of the complainants, by their solicitor, it is this eighth day of March, A. D. 1905, ordered that the defendants, the unknown heirs, alienees, and devisees of said William H. Parker, deceased, cause their appearance to be made herein on the first rule day occurring after the expiration of forty (40) days, exclusive of Sundays and legal holidays, after the date of the first publication of this order; otherwise this cause will be proceeded with as in case of default. It is further ordered that this order shall be published in The Washington Law Reporter four (4) times during the current month of March and in each issue of said Reporter during the month of April, 1905, the court being satisfied upon good cause shown by the bill and affidavit, filed in this cause, that it is not necessary that this order shall be published at least twice a month during the period of not less than three (3) months, or that the same shall be published in any other paper, no other paper being selected by the parties. By the Court: THOS. H. ANDERSON, Justice. A true copy. Test: J. R. Young, Clerk, by F. E. Cunningham, Asst. Clerk. 10-8t

COURT OF APPEALS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA: Alice M. Patterson, appellant, v. The Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation 274
Legal Notices 284

THIS WEEK'S DECISIONS BY THE COURT OF APPEALS.

Wills; Construction of Devise in Trust.

In Cruit v. Owen, the proceeding was to construe a will. By the will the real estate of the testator was left in trust for his wife during her life, and on her death in trust for four daughters, share and share alike, for their lives, and from and after the death of the daughters in trust for the child or children of each of the daughters then living, "such child or children to take the share to which his, her, or their parent was entitled." One daughter died prior to the mother, unmarried and childless, and the mother died in 1876. Subsequently two other of the daughters died, one leaving three children, and the other unmarried and childless. The court below held that the three children of the deceased daughter were entitled to one-half the revenues of the estate during the life of their aunt, and to the equitable title in remainder in the property, subject to the rights of any child or children of the aunt, who during her life was entitled to the remaining one-half of the revenues of the estate. The decree is affirmed in an opinion by Mr. Justice Duell.

Deeds; Cancellation; Fraud; Consideration.

In Slater v. Rudderforth et al., the suit was to cancel deeds to certain real estate in this District, and for a reconveyance thereof to complainants. The complainants alleged that the deed had been procured from them during their minority by fraud practiced upon them and upon their mother, who had a life estate in the premises, by one of the defendants; that no consideration had been paid them for the deed, and that upon coming of age they had repudiated and disaffirmed the deed. The court below decided in favor of the complainants, and the decree is affirmed in an opinion by Mr. Justice Morris.

Unincorporated Joint Stock Company; Partnership; Withdrawal of Partner; Husband and Wife as Partners.

In Norwood v. Francis, the appeal was from a judgment entered upon a verdict directed by the court in an action by a depositor in a bank conducted by an unincorporated joint stock company whose members were therefore liable as partners. The action was against two persons, alleged to have been stockholders in the company. As to one of them, it was held that he had relieved himself from liability by withdrawing from the company some years before the deposit was made. As to the other defendant, it appeared she was a married woman, and that her husband was also a stockholder in the company; and it was held that, in the absence of specific statutory authority, a wife can not be a member with her husband of a partnership such as the one in question, and that therefore she was not liable. The opinion of the court is by Mr. Justice Duell.

Resulting Trust; Parol Agreement; Statute of Frauds.

In McIntosh v. Green, the appeal was from a decree dismissing a bill to declare a trust in certain lands, and for a conveyance of the legal title. The trial court held that no foundation was shown upon which to raise a resulting trust, and that the case resolved itself into an attempt to establish an express trust by parol, which was prohibited by the statute of frauds. The Court of Appeals affirms the decree, in an opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Shepard.

Will; Bequest to Wife Held Absolute.

In Montgomery v. Brown et al., the suit was to construe a will. By one clause of the will testator gave all his real estate to his wife for life, with power to mortgage it should her circumstances require it. By a separate clause he bequeathed her his life insurance and all other property not otherwise disposed of. By another clause it was provided that at the death of his wife all his property, real, personal, and mixed, should go to his brother. The controversy was as to whether the gift to the brother included the life insurance, it appearing that at the death of the wife she had in her possession certain notes representing the proceeds of the policy. The trial court held that the gift of the insurance money to the wife was absolute, and its decree is affirmed in an opinion by Mr. Justice Duell.

Justice of the Peace; Appeal Bond; Mandamus.

In Bundy v. U. S. ex rel. Darling, the appeal was from an order of the court below directing the issue of a writ of mandamus to compel the respondent, a justice of the peace, to pass upon the sufficiency of an appeal bond. It appeared that the notice of appeal gave the name of the "Title Guaranty and Trust Company" as surety, but omitted the words "of Scranton, Pennsylvania," which form part of its corporate name. The justice of the peace held the notice insufficient and declined to approve the bond. Thereupon the appellant applied for and obtained the writ of mandamus. The Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Shepard, affirms the order directing the issue of the writ. Several interesting questions in reference to the rules regulating appeals from justices of the peace are referred to in the opinion.

Principal and Agent; Payment to Agent.

In Held v. Walker, the appeal was from a judgment upon a verdict directed for defendant in a case appealed from a justice of the peace. The question involved was whether the defendant was justified in making payment to an agent who, it appeared, had failed to pay the money over to the principal. The case was tried before a jury, and there being a conflict in the evidence on the point, the court holds that it should have been submitted to the jury. The opinion was delivered by Mr. Justice Morris.

Physicians; Conviction of Unprofessional Conduct Reversed.

In the case of Czarra v. Board of Medical Supervisors, a finding by the board that the appellant was guilty of unprofessional conduct and revoking his license as a physician, is reversed, in an opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Shepard. The court holds that Congress has power to regulate the practice of medicine and surgery in the District of Columbia, and to define what shall constitute unprofessional or dishonorable conduct, but that the act of Congress, under which the prosecution was brought, fails to do so, and is therefore void for uncertainty. This is the second appeal in this case, that on the former appeal being reported in 32 Wash. Law Rep. 744.

Divorce; Evidence Held Insufficient.

In Michalowicz v. Michalowicz, the appeal was from an order of the court below dismissing a bill for divorce. The Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Shepard, holds that the bill was rightly dismissed, for the reason that the evidence was insufficient to justify a decree of divorce.

Assault and Battery; Judgment Affirmed.

In Hubbard v. Perlie, the appeal was from a judgment of the court below in an action for assault and battery. The Court of Appeals holds that no error was committed by the trial court, and affirms the judgment, in an opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Shepard.

Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

ALICE M. PATTERSON, APPELLANT,

v.

THE OCEAN ACCIDENT AND GUARANTEE CORPORATION.

Accident Insurance; Evidence; Res Gestæ; Proximate Cause; Interpretation of Policy; Examination of Body of Assured.

1. In an action upon a policy of accident insurance, declarations by the assured, an osteopathist, made shortly after the accident, tending to show that he was then suffering severe bodily pain and had sustained an accidental strain in the treatment of a patient, are admissible in evidence as part of the res gestæ.
2. Statements by the assured to his attending physician, made the day after the accident, tending to show his bodily pain, the particular location of the same, and the symptoms of his malady, are admissible in evidence; but his statement then made tending to show that he had received a strain the day before to which he attributed his condition, are properly excluded as not being part of the res gestæ.
3. The rule in ordinary cases is that what is the proximate cause of an injury is generally a question of fact for the jury, to be determined as a fact in view of all the circumstances of fact attending it.
4. A strain received in the ordinary course of the assured's business is an accident within the meaning of a policy insuring "against accidental bodily injuries caused, solely, . . . by external, violent, and visible means, which shall independently of all other causes disable the assured."
5. In the interpretation of contracts of insurance, in cases of doubt that interpretation is to be given which favors the insured rather than the insurer.
6. A policy insuring "against accidental bodily injuries caused solely by external, violent, and visible means, which shall independently of all other causes disable the assured," and providing that if death result "as the actual and direct cause" of such bodily inquiries, a certain sum should be paid, construed, and held not to mean that there should be no recovery where there was a pre-existing diseased condition of the body, notwithstanding the accidental injury may have been the exciting, efficient, predominant cause of death; but to mean only that the intervening accident must be the proximate, direct cause of death.
7. In an action on such a policy, it clearly appeared the assured, an osteopathist, had sustained an accidental strain while treating a patient which gave him severe bodily pain and caused the cessation of his labors; that prior thereto he had been a strong and apparently healthy man; that he continued to suffer great pain in the same parts of his body until his death about ten days thereafter; and there was some evidence tending to show that the accidental strain had caused the rupture of some ligaments or tissue connected with the liver, or the rupture of the gall bladder or bile duct, thereby becoming the actual, efficient cause of the death of the assured. Held, that the question whether the death was accidental was for the jury, and the trial court erred in directing a verdict for defendant.
8. A provision of the policy giving the medical adviser of the insurer the right to examine the body of the assured held not to include the right of autopsy or dissection of the body, much less exhumation for that purpose; but a refusal to permit an examination of the body, upon demand made at a reasonable time and place before burial, would bar recovery on the policy.

No. 1481. Decided February 8, 1905.

Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at law, No. 45,752, entered upon a verdict directed by the court in an action upon a policy of accident insurance.

Mr. A. A. Hoehling, Jr., and Mr. H. F. Woodard for the appellant.

Mr. Geo. E. Hamilton and Mr. M. J. Colbert for the appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice SHEPARD delivered the opinion of the Court:

This action was brought by Alice M. Patterson against the Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation, Limited, of London, England, upon a contract of accident insurance made with Henry E. Patterson.

The declaration alleged the issue of the policy by the defendant to Henry E. Patterson June 14, 1901, insuring him for one year against accidental bodily injuries; that in consideration of the premium paid, the defendant promised, in the event of accidental bodily injuries resulting in the death of said Henry E. Patterson, to pay $5,000 to the plaintiff, Alice M. Patterson; that said Henry E. Patterson received an accidental strain on March 28, 1902, which caused his death on April 10, 1902; that due proof of loss has been made as required, and that defendant had refused to pay the sum so promised.

The defendant, among other pleas in bar of the accident, pleaded in substance that the injury alleged was not the cause of the death of the insured; that notice of the injury had not been given as required by the conditions of the policy; and that defendant's right to examine the body of the insured, as stipulated in the policy, had been denied. Demurrer to these pleas was sustained and issue was joined on plea of non assumpsit.

The policy was introduced in evidence. It bears date June 14, 1901, and recites that in consideration of the warranties set forth therein and the receipt of $25, the defendant insures Henry E. Patterson, for the term of one year, "against accidental bodily injuries caused solely, during the term of this insurance, . . . by external, violent, and visible means, which shall, independently of all other causes, disable the assured as follows: A. If death shall result in ninety days from date of such bodily injuries, as the actual and direct cause thereof, the corporation will pay the principal sum of five thousand dollars ($5,000) to Alice M. Patterson if surviving.' . . .

The policy is lengthy, containing many provisions, conditions, and exceptions, and only those having some possible bearing on the issues of the case will be set forth.

Section 10, article J, provides that: "Any medical adviser of the corporation shall have the right and opportunity, as often as he may require, to examine the person or body of the assured in respect to alleged injury or cause of death, and any refusal on the part of the assured, or of the beneficiary, or of the legal representatives of the assured, to comply with this provision shall operate to defeat the policy."

Clause 13 of the warranty section reads: "My hearing or vision is not impaired; I have never had, nor am I subject to, fits, diseases of the brain, or other mental or bodily infirmities except as herein stated." No special form of application for insurance seems to have been required, but in the warranty section certain facts are written down as statements of the assured, including clause 13, aforesaid.

The plaintiff Alice M. Patterson was the wife of the assured.

Dr. Wilber Lee Smith, a brother of the plaintiff, testified to the following facts: Both he and Henry E. Patterson were osteopathists and practiced together. He had known Patterson intimately for twenty years. Patterson was 42 years old, 5 feet 11 inches tall, and weighed 180 pounds. His figure was erect and he was strong and vigorous. Prior to 1897 he had not suffered from illness. In that year he had what was thought to be a case of intestinal obstruction and due to excessive eating of strawberries. He had no illness from that time to his last one that caused him to remain away from his office, but had an occasional ailment, such as headache or indigestion. He had practiced osteopathy since 1892 or 1893. The practice of osteopathy consists in manipulating the body, and requires muscular strength. On March 28, 1902, he was treating patients, and about 1 p. m. came out of the treating room. He had his hand on his back, and meeting witness in the hall, said he had strained himself and was suffering great pain. He went into one of the treating rooms and took off his coat and vest, and witness examined him and gave him a gentle manipulation. He did not say when it occurred, but witness had seen him about a half an hour before and he then gave no indications of pain. Witness could feel a contraction of the muscles between the seventh and ninth dorsal vertebræ. Manipulation being painful, witness applied a hot-water bottle, which gave temporary relief. He stayed at the office until about 4 p. m., when he went home. Witness saw him again the next afternoon. Dr. George H. Lee attended him. He complained of grinding pains in the back that extended around the abdomen. He was suffering greatly. Saw him every day until his death, April 10, 1902, about 1.25 a. m. On cross-examination, witness said that assured had a policy in the Mutual Life Insurance Company; that he had made an affidavit in the matter of that claim and stated the cause of death as inflammation of the liver—hepatitis. Stated in that affidavit also that he had suffered an injury on February 20, 1902. He did have an accident at that time, but it did not incapacitate him; he did not lose a day from his office. Did not see the accident, but he told me he had strained his back in raising a window. Examined him, treated his back by manipulation, and found evidence of a strain. Dr. Patterson had treated eight or nine patients on March 28, but did not say which one he was treating when he received the strain. An injury to the muscles of the back can not affect the liver, except that wrenching of the back could strain the liver. It might rupture a ligament of the liver. Have read where a strain of the body can produce liver trouble. The only exterior sign visible was some injury to the muscles. There is no muscular tissue in the liver or connected with it, but there are ligaments in the liver. They do not form a part of the liver, but support it, and when these are strained it is called a strain of the liver. The contraction of the muscles noticed might have been produced by a variety of causes, but did not think it was.

Dr. George H. Lee was the next witness. Said he was a homeopathic physician and had been in practice since 1876. Visited the assured twice on March 29, 1902. Found him suffering severe pain in the epigastrium and diaphragm apparently, and all that part of the body involving the diaphragm, the epigastrium, and the liver. The pain was in the region of the abdomen, the right side and the back. Conditions were the same morning and evening. He made statements to the witness as to the cause of his injuries, but on objection of the defendant he was not permitted to repeat them. To this exclusion the plaintiff excepted. The patient said the pains were severe, and witness was guided by what seemed to be his condition, the character of the pains and their locality; of course one is controlled some by the history of the case. Called on next day and found him worse; he had a chill at 5 p. m., and spent the night with him. He was then suffering from hepatitis, with signs of jaundice, and the pain had become localized about the liver. At 8 next day he had another chill with continued pain and rise of pulse and temperature. The symptoms became more severe and he died early in the morning of April 10. The remainder of witness' evidence is recited in the bill of exceptions as follows:

"Q. Doctor, what in your opinion was the starting, procuring, or proximate cause of the illness which resulted in Dr. Patterson's death?

"The Court: Judging just from the symptoms you found when you first saw him and the symptoms he had during the whole of his sickness up to the time of his death, you can base your opinion as to what you suppose was the cause of that condition, as a medical man and an expert you have some opinion; you can form some opinion from those circumstances, and that you can give. Leave out of your mind anything that he said. Suppose he had not said anything to you at all, as to how he got hurt, or whether he had been hurt at all or not, and you took the man just as he was and followed him down to his death. What could you form in your own mind as to the cause of that condition or trouble?

"A. If he had not told me anything at all, of course I should have cast about in my mind for some probable cause, and perhaps could have found it, and should simply have accepted the fact that he was in that condition——

"The Court: What probable cause would have started that condition of affairs?

"A. There are two or three that could have caused that condition of affairs—hepatitis may come on from a bilious condition of the system, and the first a man knows is that he has it; he does not know how it comes. If a person has had anything in the nature of an injury we naturally refer to that as being the probable cause.

"Another cause that might be explanatory of the symptoms that he had, was gall stone—he might have had gall stones or he might have had a rupture. I mean gall stones from the liver, or as we call them, biliary calculi and not vesical calculi, which pertain to the bladder, or he might have had a rupture of the gall bladder. If such was the case it would probably come from an accident of some sort, but it would not be likely to occur unless the patient was in a predisposed condition. It would not be likely to occur in a perfectly well man. If a man is physically well, but who is afflicted with gall stones, it is possible that a strain or wrench would produce rupture of the gall bladder. Gall stones may be of various sizes. It would be possible to precipitate the gall stone into the gall duct by reason of a sudden strain or wrench. It often happens that people having gall stones go through life without suffering any from them, as they may remain in the gall bladder indefinitely without making any serious difficulty. I do not know positively that the patient had gall stones, as that could only be ascertained by an autopsy. I suspected gall stones, and kept a lookout for them, as the symptoms suggested it. There were various symptoms to suggest gall stones. My treatment was in part directed to getting rid of the stone, if one might be in the common duct, and I gave him remedies to act on the liver and gall bladder, and to cause the stone, if one was there, to move along, which finally produced quite free evacuations, but I did not find a stone.

"Q. Doctor, considering all the pathological conditions and symptoms of Dr. Patterson from the time you first saw him until his death, state whether or not, in your opinion, his death may have been the result of strain, or rupture of the gall bladder, ligaments, or of the liver itself? A. I do not know that I can answer the question in that form; if you mean rupture of the liver you will have to strike that out.

"Q. Well, as to the other two, striking out the reference to the liver. A. That would not be probable.

"Q. May not strain have resulted in rupture of the gall bladder and ligaments? A. Strain might result in rupture of the gall bladder. Yes, that might occur; but I would hardly expect that death would result from rupture of the ligaments or of the liver, but it might result from rupture of the gall bladder.

"On cross-examination witness said:

"The first time I saw Dr. Patterson was on March 29, 1902, at which time I found no evidence of external injury. There was no discoloration and no condition of the muscles to indicate injury. There were no objective signs of any injury. In Dr. Patterson's case there was undoubtedly a complication, as he had inflammation of the liver; he may have had gall stones, but that could only be determined definitely by an autopsy. I suspected them, and looked for them, but did not find them, but you can not always tell definitely about such things without an autopsy. A gall stone may have been impacted in the duct, and in that event it could not be discovered except by autopsy. There was inflammation of the liver, there was hepatitis, and there may have been gall stones, and there may have been rupture of the gall bladder. There were signs that this might have occurred, but could not be determined definitely without an autopsy. Mrs. Patterson, being overcome with grief, declined to permit an autopsy, and therefore, being uncertain whether there were gall stones or rupture of the gall bladder, I made out the death certificate as hepatitis because that was the only thing I could be confident of. Hepatitis means inflammation of the liver. There may be various causes for it. Hepatitis is acute or chronic. Chronic hepatitis is slow and acute hepatitis may be very rapid. It is sometimes accompanied by acute pain, but not always.

Digitized by Google

Inflammation of the liver of itself could not ordinarily and directly be produced by a strain of the muscles of the back. I never knew of a simple stretching of the muscles of the back to produce inflammation of the liver, nor would I expect it to occur in a man of Dr. Patterson's physique from a wrench received while rubbing a patient, but I would not say that it could not occur.

"I do know of a case where inflammation of the liver was brought on by a strain of the external muscles of the back. It is a case which happened to myself. I was riding in a gig, one of these high, two-wheeled gigs that doctors used to ride on in the country. I was riding over a muddy road with deep ruts in it, when one wheel went down and I received a wrench and a twist which hurt me. I felt a pain in there then, but I did not think any more about it. I didn't know anything was the matter with me; but next morning when I got up out of bed and stood on my feet a pain caught me in my liver so terrible that I fell back on the bed, either fainting or almost fainting. It was very severe, and from that time I had hepatitis. I had inflammation of the liver. I suppose that is the way I got it. I presume I was in a bilious condition. If I had been perfectly well, I don't suppose it would have hurt me.

"In the course of my practice in reading I have never heard of such a case. Simply by manipulating a patient he would not be likely to produce a strain that could cause hepatitis, but I would not say that it could not occur. I can not explain how a muscular strain between the seventh and ninth dorsal vertebræ could carry inflammation to a healthy liver, and if such a result did follow I should say that the man's liver was not in a healthy condition, and that he was predisposed to disease. If the gall bladder were ruptured syptoms would probably be jaundice, and there would be acute pain and a rise of temperature. There would be symptons pointing unmistakably to the hepatic region. If it were ruptured so as to let out the contents into the peritoneal cavity it would cause peritonitis, which would come on very quickly. Gall stones may be precipitated without the patient having suffered any accident at all, as the physiological action of the gall bladder is to expel a stone, and when expelled, the stone proceeds through the common duct to the duodenum. These stones sometimes, when expelled, become impacted in the duct and can not move, the result being that the patient succumbs to the conditions that follow, such as jaundice, pain, and severe sickness. They would be very much the same symptoms as Dr. Patterson manifested, and that condition might have caused his death.

"When a stone becomes impacted in the duct the normal functions are prevented from being carried on. Fearing such might be the case I proposed to Dr. Patterson a surgical operation, but he objected so strenuously that I did not press the subject. I proposed a consultation, but it was not desired by the patient.

"In my report of this death to the insurance company I stated as a history of the disease from first to last 'acute hepatitis. He was violently ill when I was called to see him, with pain, fever, rigor, failing strength, and coma.'

"I also stated in my certificate that the diaphragm, stomach, and other adjacent parts were more or less involved secondarily; that is, sympathetically.

"The inflammation of the liver, which I found existing in Dr. Patterson, might have been produced by several causes, as before stated, and any one of those causes might have caused his death.

"I made a request for an autopsy to satisfy myself of the real trouble, and I heard that the insurance company also suggested an autopsy.

"On redirect-examination witness said: It is a fact that a rupture of the bladder might have been the result of a strain, wrench, and that sometimes gall stones remain in the gall bladder inactive for quite a long time, and they are sometimes precipitated by external forces of some kind. If the stone was too large to pass through the common duct it would obstruct the flow of bile and cause jaundice and inflammation. If it continued long enough it would produce also ulceration which would be followed by perforation. It is hard to tell what might ensue in a case of that kind, because the same thing does not always happen. Such a condition would, in all probability, produce peritonitis. The stones differ in size.

"On recross-examination witness said: There were no symptoms in Dr. Patterson's case to, at first, indicate peritonitis, but just before his death there were indications of it. There was distention of the abdomen and tenderness. That might have arisen from an impaction of gall stones, or it might arise from the discharge of pus and bilious matter into the abdomen. Any of these causes would give rise to peritonitis. This pus would have been discharged from a suppurative process going on probably under the surface of the liver in connection with the gall bladder.

"By Mr. Hoehling: Will you please state whether, on the occasion of your first visit, professionally, to Henry E. Patterson, on the 29th day of March, 1902, he made any statement to you as to the cause of his condition physically, and if so, state what it was.

"Which question was objected to by counsel for the defendant, and the objection sustained. To the ruling of the court in sustaining said objection the plaintiff duly excepted.

The plaintiff, Alice M. Patterson, testified as follows:

"I have known Dr. Patterson since childhood. His physical condition prior to his death was good. He was ill only three times since our marriage that I recall. We were married in 1884. The first time he was ill was in 1893 when he suffered from acute indigestion, and was sick only one day. The next time was in 1897; he was suffering from an intestinal obstruction caused by eating strawberries; he was ill three or four days, and returned to his business in about twelve days. The next illness was facial neuralgia; I think that was before 1893; aside from this he had good health, was a strong man, and attended to his work all the time. He weighed about one hundred and eighty pounds, was six feet tall, and a muscular man. His appetite was normal, and he was not of a nervous disposition. I was at the office on March 28, 1902, engaged with him in the practice of osteopathy. He had been treating patients all the morning. He had been treating a patient when he came out in the hall where he met me—I also had been treating a patient in another room. He said, 'I have strained my back, I have given myself a terrible wrench.' He went into one of the treating rooms, and I examined him and gave him a gentle treatment in the region of the strain. It was a strain he had received while working either in lifting or turning a patient over on the table, or something of that sort. I left him lying on the table with a hot water bottle on him while I went on with my work. He said he was suffering acute pain from the twist or lift, that he had overlifted and strained his back. The hot water bottle seemed to give him some relief. He remained on the table for about an hour, then he got up and tried to do some work, but he found the pain too severe and got Dr. Smith to treat his patient, and he remained in the room for a time and then went into another room and laid down, where he stayed for two hours, and then he went home. He said he could not stay any longer because of that severe pain in the back.

"Prior to the 28th of March he had not suffered from any trouble except a slight pain that he had nearly a month, or several weeks before, on the 20th of February, when he had a slight strain, from which he quickly recovered. It did not incapacitate him. I came to the office with him on March 28, and he was then apparently perfectly well. I saw him a very few minutes, not over thirty, or perhaps fifteen, I can not say definitely, before he came into the hall and complained of this strain, and he was then all right, perfectly well. He went home that day by himself, and I followed in a few minutes. I found him still suffering extreme pain. I made him take a hot bath and I rubbed his back with chloroform liniment and put him to bed. The pain was on the right side of the spine between the sixth and seventh vertebræ, and from there down to the ninth or tenth, just over the region of the spine. About 5 o'clock he complained of pain in the abdomen. He said the pain seemed to begin in the back and extend around to the front.

"I sent for Dr. Lee the next morning about 10.30 o'clock. He seemed to grow gradually worse from the time of the injury. Dr. Lee came to the house about 11.30, and came back later in the afternoon, as Dr. Patterson had grown very much worse, and at 6.30 Dr. Lee had to give him a hypodermic injection. The patient said he could not stand the pain. He complained chiefly of the pain in his back, but I don't think he was delirious until towards the last. He died on April 10. An operation was suggested the evening before he died, but I do not remember Dr. Lee's requesting to make an autopsy. I furnished the proofs of death to the defendant company.

"Plaintiff thereupon offered in evidence the letter of the Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation, dated May 9, 1902, acknowledging receipt from William M. Springer, of No. 1416 F street, Washington, D. C., of his letter of May 8, with inclosures. The enclosures consisting of affidavits or proof of death.

"The Witness: I have received nothing from the company and am the beneficiary named in the policy of insurance.

"On cross-examination witness stated: Dr. Patterson was also insured in the Mutual Life Insurance Company, of New York. His application was in March, 1902; I furnished proofs of death to that company. I do not remember the statement I made as to the cause of death, but I signed and made oath to the statement, which I recognize as the one now presented me.

"In my affidavit given to the defendant company I stated that about noon on the 28th day of March, my husband, who had been treating a patient in another room, informed me that he had strained himself; that he became sick, and subsequently died. In my statement to the Mutual Life Insurance Company the following questions and answers appear:

"Q. When did the health of deceased first become to be affected? A. March 28, 1902.

"Q. The duration of his illness? A. He died April 10, 1902.

"Q. What was the immediate cause of death? A. Inflammation of the liver.

"Q. Give every particular in relation to the last illness within your knowledge? A. Brought about by strain caused by raising a window in an awkward position.

"The witness: That was the first strain he had, which was on February 20. I don't know why I stated to the Mutual Life Insurance Company that the injury suffered by Dr. Patterson occurred on February 20 from raising a window; it must be a mistake, because he recovered from his first injury. He told me about this injury. I did not see the accident. He did not report this first accident to the Accident Insurance Company, because he did not consider it serious enough. I don't know which patient he was treating when he was hurt, or the name of the patient. He came out in the hall and said, 'I have strained myself in a treatment.' His language was, 'I have just strained myself terribly.' He said he was suffering great pain, and both Dr. Smith and myself examined him. I removed his coat and vest, and raised his shirts and examined his flesh in the back. I observed nothing but a tightening of the ligaments of the muscles, and a sore condition. I know it was sore from what he told me. I am an osteopathist, but am not a physician. The injury appeared on the right side, particularly close under the shoulder blade. I gave notice of Dr. Patterson's injury to the defendant on April 7. The officers of the defendant came to the house about fifteen minutes before the funeral and asked to have an autopsy made. I did not give the company any notice of Dr. Patterson's death, but think it was done by friends. I do not know when this notice was given. I think Mr. Boss, who was the agent of the company, gave the notice. The officers of the company asked permission of some members of the family to examine the body, but it was about fifteen minutes before the funeral. My brother told me that they came to the house, but I did not see them. I did not know, before the funeral, that permission to examine the body had been denied them, but heard it afterwards. I do not think that my brother came upstairs to consult me while Dr. Johnston and Dr. Glazebrook were downstairs waiting for permission to examine the body, but I do not think it is so. When these doctors came, people were already coming to the house for the funeral. I do not know that the defendant company received notice of Dr. Patterson's death only two hours before the funeral.

"I received a letter from the agent of the defendant, dated April 13, 1902, which is as follows:

"'DEAR MADAM: We were notified of Dr. Patterson's death at 9.30 Saturday morning, April 12, 1902. As Mr. Patterson held an accident policy in this company, we, at once, sent Dr. Joseph Taber Johnston and Dr. L. W. Glazebrook to your residence to examine the body of Dr. Patterson in respect to the cause of his death as provided in the policy. This examination was refused. The importance of determining absolutely the cause of his death is so great, both for you as beneficiary under the policy, and for us, that we are willing to again offer to make such examination. If you will consent to it, we will arrange the time to suit the physician who represents you, and he will, of course, be entitled to be present at the examination.

"'Please let us hear from you in regard to this before twelve, noon, Monday, April 14, 1902, so that the examination may be made promptly. The expense of disinterment and examination will be paid by us.

"'If the examination provided by the policy is again refused, we shall disclaim all liability on the policy.

"'We are very sorry to be obliged to disturb you in this matter, under the circumstances, but the importance of the matter for us both does not admit of delay.

"'Very truly yours,

"'OCEAN ACCIDENT AND GUARANTEE CORPORATION, LIMITED,

"'By L. O. DE LASHMUTT,

General Agent for D. C.'

"The witness: I made no reply to this letter personally. I have no personal knowledge of any notice of the death being sent to the company, but Mr. Boss, the agent, said it had, and when the doctors asked for permission to examine the body it was refused because we were just ready for the funeral services to begin. They asked permission afterwards to have the body disinterred, and I did not refuse that outright; of course I objected to it, and when Dr. Nevitt came and asked me about it, I, of course, objected to having it done.

"On redirect examination witness said: I was not seen by any officer of the company personally until after the burial. Dr. Nevitt came to the house on Monday with Mr. De Lashmutt, but the latter did not come in the house. Dr. Nevitt is coroner of the District. I did not see the doctors when they called at the house on the day of the funeral, and did not know of the call until after the funeral.

"The proof of death given the Mutual Life Insurance Company is not in my handwriting, but I signed it. I have no recollection of reading it. I do not know who furnished the information from which the body of the paper is made up. Judge Springer was my attorney at the time, and I left this matter to him and my brother. Dr. Nevitt and Mr. De Lashmutt called on Monday and Dr. Nevitt asked my name and stated that he was the coroner. I told him my husband had been buried on Saturday in Rock Creek Cemetery. I did not give him the number of the lot. He said that he would have to exhume the body for examination, and I said, 'Oh, Dr. Nevitt, that is a terrible thing to have to do.' I appealed to him not to do it, and asked if there was no way that it could be avoided. He said, 'Yes; withdraw your claim for $5,000 against the Ocean Accident Company and it will not be done.' And I said, 'Well, I would rather not have the $5,000 than have that done, but I can not tell you what to do until I can see my attorney and brother, as they have charge of my affairs.' He promised me that nothing would be done until he heard further from me. Then he went away. I did not see him afterwards.

"On recross-examination witness said: I made oath to the proof of death furnished the Mutual Life Insurance Company, before the notary, but did not know him personally. I am not familiar with Dr. Lee's handwriting, and don't know who wrote the body of the paper. Dr. Lee was our physician, and he was told of the accident on February 20, as soon as he arrived at the house. He was also told of the accident on March 28. I did not communicate with Dr. Nevitt after he left my house, but my friends attended to those matters for me. I did not instruct anybody to communicate with him.

"Thereupon, to further maintain the issues on her part joined, plaintiff recalled Dr. Wibur Smith, who testified as follows: I was at the Patterson house when Drs. Johnston and Glazebrook called. As near as I can remember it was about 10.45, and the funeral was to be held at eleven o'clock. There were about twenty people in the house. I had been standing at the door for some time, and the doctors came into the house and said they had been sent there as representatives of the Accident Insurance Company to hold an autopsy. I told them that it was out of the question, as the funeral services would begin in a few minutes, and that it could not be done. I told them they could step in and look at the body, but they said that it was of no use. They then went away. They had been there only a few minutes. This conversation took place in the hall, and the body was in the parlor. They did not attempt to make an examination. I did not, at that time, tell Mrs. Patterson that the doctors were there. I spoke to her of the probability of an autopsy on the day before, but she had expressed a desire against it. Dr. Lee also spoke to me about it, and I mentioned the subject to her, but it did not agree with her wishes, and was not pressed.

"I think Mr. Boss called at the house during Dr. Patterson's illness. I notified him of the injury on April 7. I can not remember that either Dr. Johnston or Dr. Glazebrook said anything about placing the remains in a vault, and make the examination after the funeral. I don't know when Mr. Boss learned of Dr. Patterson's death, but I think he called the night before the funeral. I know that no representative of the company called at the house to my knowledge between the date of the notice, which was given them, up to about fifteen minutes before the funeral services began.

"On recross-examination witness said: I understood that Mr. Boss was a special agent of the company; he took my application for a policy. I don't know whether you would call him an insurance broker or not. I know he was a special agent, because he took my application and he took Dr. Patterson's application. His office was with Mr. Wilson, who is the district agent for the New England Mutual Life Insurance Company. The Accident Company's office was at Mr. De Lashmutt's office, which is No. 1421 G street. I knew he was the district agent, but I did not give him any notice. I remember making checks for premiums on my policy in this company to Mr. Boss as special agent.

"When the doctors called at the house on the day of the funeral and asked leave to make an autopsy, I told them that it could not be done. The body was in the coffin, but it was not sealed up. I do not know whether they could have made an examination of the body, but they could view it.

"The only portion of the body that was exposed was the face and hands. I don't remember that after declining to permit an autopsy, the doctors asked that the funeral be permitted to go on, and that the body be placed in the vault temporarily so that they could make an examination. I would not deny that such request was made, and I would not affirm it, because I do not remember.

"Thereupon the plaintiff, to further maintain the issue on her part joined, recalled William A. Boss, who testified as follows: I was present at the Patterson house when Drs. Johnston and Glazebrook called. Dr. Smith met them at the door; they had some conversation, and in a few minutes they asked if they could hold an autopsy, and Dr. Smith said no. Then they asked if they could examine the body. Dr. Smith said they could view the body. That was about 10.45. I did not hear them request that the body be placed in a vault, and I would have heard it if such request had been made.

"I had made arrangements some time before with Mr. Newton, who was the manager of the Accident Insurance Company, to permit me to write accident insurance for him as special agent; it was a verbal agreement.

"The first I heard of Dr. Patterson's injury was about April 7—I received this notice from Dr. Smith. I forwarded Dr. Smith's letter to Mr. De Lashmutt's office, who was at that time manager of the company. I learned of Dr. Patterson's death on Friday night, read it in the newspaper, and I immediately went to the house. The next morning at nine o'clock I went to Mr. De Lashmutt's office, and notified him of the death; that was the day of the funeral. He at once telephoned to New York for instructions, and he asked Drs. Johnston and Glazebrook to go to the house. I should say it was between 9.30 and ten o'clock. I don't think the company had any regular medical examiner at that time.

On cross-examination witness said: "I do not claim that at that time I was an agent of the company authorized to receive death notices. My duties were to submit accident policies, and I had nothing further to do except to renew the policy when it was due. I was also engaged in the life insurance business and a solicitor of insurance of various kinds.

"Dr. Smith's notice was in writing, and I don't recall whether I mailed it to Mr. De Lashmutt or took it to his office. I think I took it there and delivered it to his clerk, but I am not certain about this. I received the notice on April 7, and I think I sent it to Mr. De Lashmutt on the 8th, which was Tuesday. I think Dr. Patterson died Thursday night. I saw it in Friday night's paper, and the next morning notified Mr. De Lashmutt. I could not say that Drs. Johnston and Glazebrook did not request to have the body placed in a vault temporarily, as I do not remember. I was present during the conversation which took place in the hall between the doctors, and I do not remember Dr. Smith's leaving the hall."

Upon the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence the court sustained a motion to direct a verdict for the defendant, and plaintiff has appealed from the judgment rendered thereon.

1. The declarations of the assured, testified to by his wife and brother-in-law, were properly admitted as tending to show not only that he was then suffering severe bodily pain, but also that he had sustained an accidental strain in the treatment of a patient. They come clearly within the rule of competency, as part of the res gestæ, that was enounced by the Supreme Court of the United States in Insurance Co. v. Mosley, 8 Wall. 397, 404, 405. See, also, Insurance Co. v. Hillmon, 145 U. S. 285, 296; R. R. Co. v. McLane, 11 App. D. C., 220, 222: 25 Wash. Law Rep. 485.

The statements made by the assured to his attending physician, on the day after the alleged accident, tending to show his bodily pain, the particular location of the same, and the symptoms of his malady were also properly admitted. N. P. R. R. v. Urlin, 158 U. S. 271, 274.

But it was not error to exclude his statements then made to the physician tending to show that he had received a strain on the day before to which he attributed his condition. This was too long after the occurrence to be admissible as part of the res gestæ under the rule of the cases before cited.

2. The case was withdrawn from the jury on the ground that the evidence offered by the plaintiff was not sufficient, as matter of law, to establish liability on the part of the defendant.

(1) The first question is, was the evidence sufficient to require submission to the jury to determine whether the assured sustained an accident on March 28, and, if so, whether the same was the actual and direct cause of his death within the meaning of the policy?

The evidence plainly tended to show that prior to March 28 the assured had been a strong, vigorous, and apparently healthy man; and that on that day he sustained an accidental strain which gave him severe bodily pain and caused the cessation of his labors. The existence of these facts depended upon the credibility of the witnesses testifying thereto and the weight of their evidence, both of which were within the exclusive province of the jury.

(2) The evidence tending to show that the assured continued to suffer great pain in the same parts of the body until his death about ten days thereafter was strong and undisputed.

Digitized by Google

The evidence tending to show that the accidental strain caused the rupture of some ligaments or tissue connected with the liver, or the rupture of the gall bladder or bile duct, thereby becoming the actual, efficient cause of death, is undoubtedly weak, but we are not prepared to say that it was so plainly insufficient as to warrant its withdrawal from the consideration of the jury. Doubting whether all reasonable men must necessarily come to the one conclusion therefrom, that plaintiff had failed to make out a case of death resulting from accident, we are constrained to resolve that doubt in favor of trial by jury. The rule in ordinary cases is, that what is the proximate cause of an injury is generally a question for the jury, to be determined as a fact in view of all the circumstances of fact attending it. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 474, 476; Guenther v. Met. R. R. Co., 23 App. D. C. 493, 510: 32 Wash. Law Rep. 422.

Were this an action of damages against a wrongdoer for death, resulting from an injury caused by wilful or negligent act, the defendant could not escape liability on the mere ground that before the accident there was an existing malady or diseased condition of the liver, gall bladder, or bile duct of the deceased, and that death resulted or was hastened because the injury aggravated the effects of that disease, or the disease aggravated the effects of the injury. The liability exists in such cases if the injury is the predominant, efficient cause of the death, notwithstanding it would not have naturally produced death if there had been no such preexisting disease. Guenther v. Met. R. R., 23 App. D. C. 493, 515, 516: 32 Wash Law Rep. 422. That the rule in that case might not be regarded as intended to extend to a case of contract, which was not there involved, it was said: "Whatever the rule may be in an action depending upon the construction of a contract of insurance against accident, under certain limitations and exceptions, as to liability where the death was from disease, 'aggravated and made fatal,' by accident, we do not think it can apply in an action of tort for the benefit of a wrongdoer."

(3) It remains, now, to consider the question in the light of the stipulations of the contract upon which the action is maintained.

By the first of these the insurance is expressly stated to be, "against accidental bodily injuries caused, solely, . . . by external, violent, and visible means, which shall independently of all other causes disable the assured."

That a strain received in the ordinary course of the assured's business, if received at all, is an accident within the contemplation of the policy we can have no doubt. Mut. Acc. Assn. v. Barry, 131 U. S. 100, 121.

The universal rule of interpretation of contracts of insurance of all kinds, is that in cases of doubt that interpretation shall be given which favors the insured rather than the insurer. The particular words quoted would seem to have been intended particularly to apply to a case of disability for which the assured might claim the indemnity stipulated in the policy. But assuming that they were expressly intended to apply to the death indemnity clause, and be read in connection with the words therein providing that death shall result from accidental bodily injuries as the "actual and direct cause thereof," we think they can not be regarded as clearly meaning that there shall be no recovery in a case where there was a preexisting diseased condition of the body—a predisposing cause of death as it has been called—notwithstanding the accidental injury may have been the exciting, efficient, predominant cause.

Their meaning, considering them together or separately, is, in our opinion, that the intervening accident must be the proximate, direct cause of death, and nothing more. This conclusion is supported by the following authorities: Fetter v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 174 Mo. 276; Horsfall v. Pac. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 32 Wash. 132; Modern Woodmen Acc. Assn. v. Shryock, 54 Neb. 250; Freeman v. Mercantile Mutu. Acc. Assn., 156 Mass. 351, 353; see, also, Winspear v. Acc. Ins. Co., L. R. 6 Q. B. Div. 42, 45; Travelers Ins. Co. v. Murray, 16 Colo. 296; Atlanta Acc. Assn. v. Alexander, 104 Ga. 709; Omberg v. U. S. Mut. Acc. Assn., 101 Ky. 303.

The doctrine is well expressed by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, in Freeman v. Ins. Co., supra, in the following words: "The law will not go further back in the line of causation than to find the active, efficient, procuring cause, of which the event under consideration is the natural and probable consequence, in view of the existing circumstances and conditions. . . . An injury which might naturally produce death in a person of a certain temperament or state of health is the cause of his death, if he dies by reason of it, even if he would not have died if his temperament or previous health had been different; and this is so, as well when death comes through the medium of a disease directly induced by the injury, as when the injury immediately interrupts the vital processes."

It is true that there are cases of highly respectable authority, some of which directly and others indirectly support the contention of the appellee. These have been carefully examined, but we shall not review them, as that has been done in a satisfactory manner by the Supreme Court of Nebraska, in Modern Woodmen, etc., v. Shryock, supra. It may be remarked, however, that the able opinion in the case of National Masonic Acc. Assn. v. Shryock, 73 Fed. Rep. 774, upon which the appellee strongly relies, is founded upon the terms of a policy quite different from that involved in this case. Therein it was expressly stipulated that the insurance does not cover "death or disability resulting wholly or in part, directly or indirectly, from any of the following causes: . . . disease or bodily infirmity." . . .

Other provisions of this policy tend to confirm our view of the interpretation of the words before quoted. The assured was required to answer whether his hearing or vision was impaired, and whether he had ever had or been subject to fits or diseases of the brain. His negative answers thereto were declared to be special warranties, the untruth of which, in any respect, would render the policy null and void. It is reasonable to presume, therefore, that an affirmative answer to any one of these questions would have resulted in the denial of the policy. If, then, it was the intention of the insurer not to become liable in the event that an accident should result from any other malady or unknown infirmity, or in the event that a pre-existing malady, uninquired of, and probably unknown to the assured, should be developed and brought into sudden operation by an accidental injury, and produce death, why was it not expressly provided for, also, in the policy and brought to the actual knowledge of the assured? Again, this form of policy was intended for the insurance of women as well as men, and, as we have seen, expressly stipulates that it shall not cover "death or injury to a woman wholly or in part attributable to childbirth or pregnancy, although such death or injury may have been accelerated by accident." If the construction of the previous provision contended for by appellee is the correct one, this stipulation is unnecessary and unimportant. If not, its materiality and importance are obvious.

The insurer writes its contracts and its agents are expressly forbidden the power to alter any of their terms or waive any of their conditions without the consent in writing of its general manager. It is eminently just, therefore, that it should not be permitted to escape liability through any limitation thereof not fairly and reasonably disclosed by the terms and conditions of the contract to those soliciting insurance or accepting it at the solicitation of the insurer's agents.

3. The last question for consideration arises under the clause of the policy which provides that "any medical adviser of the corporation shall have the right and opportunity, as often as he may require, to examine the person or body of the assured in respect to alleged injury or cause of death, and any refusal on the part of the assured, or of the beneficiary, or of the legal representatives of the assured, to comply with this provision shall operate to defeat the policy."

We are not advised that the withdrawal of the case from the jury was founded on the evidence relating to the defense under this clause, but it presents a question that must necessarily be determined in view of the new trial that will be awarded.

We can not agree with the general contention of the appellee that this right to examine the body includes also the right of autopsy or dissection, much less exhumation, for that purpose.

As heretofore remarked, where there is any doubt as to the meaning of the terms and conditions of a contract of insurance, it is to be resolved in favor of the assured, and this rule of construction has its strongest application in relation to those that would work the forfeiture of a right otherwise maintainable. It is also a reasonable and well-established rule of interpretation that the terms used are to be understood in their ordinary and popular sense. Whatever meaning the word examine, in relation to the body of a deceased person, might convey to medical experts, we think it clear that, in popular understanding, it does not include the right of dissection.

The prejudice, if it may be so called, which so generally prevails, and especially among the relations and friends of a deceased person, against the submission of the body to dissection, would doubtless prevent many persons from accepting insurance containing an express condition extending that right to the insurer if considered material for his protection. Sudduth v. Travelers Ins. Co., 106 Fed. Rep. 822; Ewing v. Com. Trav. Mut. Acc. Assn., 55 N. Y. App. Div. 241; S. C. 170, N. Y. 590.

It would seem from the evidence before recited, that the purpose of the insurer was not to view or examine the appearance of the body merely, but to dissect the same. If the question be raised upon another trial it will be the duty of the court to instruct the jury in accordance with this view of the effect of the clause under consideration; and to submit to them the single question whether, upon demand reasonably made therefor, the plaintiff, or those acting for her, refused to permit the medical advisers of the insurer to examine the body in the sense of that word as here given. A failure to extend that permission, upon demand made at a reasonable time and place before burial, would bar recovery upon the policy.

For the reasons given, the judgment will be reversed with costs, and the cause remanded with direction to award a new trial. It is so ordered.

Humor of the Law.

Samuel Davis, court stenographer of the second circuit, said that an Irishman who several years ago tried to engage the legal services of his father had the oddest ground for a lawsuit he had ever heard of. The Irishman wanted to sue his landlady for $15. He explained that he made a contract to pay her $3 a week for board, but she was to deduct 25 cents for every meal he missed. Having got the contract duly signed, Pat began to board elsewhere and charged the lady with whom he had contracted 25 cents for every meal he missed, $5.25 worth of meals each week, for which his contract required him to pay only $3, so that by staying away he made $2.25 clear. The landlady refused to pay him his profits, and he wanted Mr. Davis to bring suit against her for him. "Father laughed at him a bit," Mr. Davis says, "and he got indignant." "A contract is a contract," said Pat, "and she ought to be made live up to her'n just as well as me mine." There were several other lawyers in town, and some of them were pretty hard up for cases, but I don't know of anybody that took that one after father turned it down."

Forfeiture of Charter of Company Incorporated Under District Code.

The case of United States against Manhattan Real Estate Securities Company, No. 47,656, at Law, in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, was a proceeding under sections 786 to 791 of the Code for a forfeiture of the charter of the corporation. The petition charged that the Manhattan Real Estate Securities Company was organized under the Code; that two of the three incorporators and trustees were never stockholders of the company; that the company had begun business before making any by-laws and before 10 per cent of its capital stock had been paid in; that it had failed to make an annual report or to keep a stock book, as required by the Code, and that the company had practically ceased to do business.

Upon the filing of the petition a rule was issued by Mr. Justice Barnard requiring the corporation to show cause why the prayers of the petition should not be granted, and the rule was served upon the company and the trustees. No answer was filed, and the cause was heard ex parte, as provided by section 790, upon the petition and affidavits. No opinion was filed by Judge Barnard, but he was of opinion that legal cause of forfeiture existed, and accordingly signed a decree annulling the charter of the company and appointing a receiver to wind up its affairs.

United States Attorney Morgan H. Beach and Assistant United States Attorney Jesse C. Adkins appeared for the United States in the proceeding.

Fraternal Benefit Association—By-Laws Adopted After Issue of Certificate.

A by-law adopted by a fraternal benefit association providing that a benefit certificate issued to a member shall be void and all benefits thereunder forfeited in case the insured shall die by suicide, felonious or otherwise, sane or insane, is consistent with the purposes of the association and with its corporate charter, and imposes a reasonable condition upon which the parties to the contract may agree. Such a by-law, although adopted after the benefit certificate was issued to the insured and before the death of the insured by suicide, violates no vested right of the beneficiary. In the case of Tisch v. The Protected Home Circle, decided March 21, 1905, by the Supreme Court of Ohio, and reported in the Ohio Law Bulletin, a benefit certificate issued by a fraternal benefit association was silent in regard to the suicide of the insured, but the application therefor contained an agreement, signed by the insured, to conform to all the laws, rules, and usages of the order then in force or that might thereafter be adopted, such compliance being made the express condition upon which the insured should be entitled to participate in the beneficiary fund. The application was in express terms made part of the contract. Thereafter the association adopted a by-law providing that benefit certificates should be void and all benefits thereunder forfeited in case the insured died by suicide, sane or insane. It was held that such by-law became a condition in the contract, which, if broken by the insured, defeated a recovery on the certificate.

Equitable Estoppel.

In Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. Abbott, decided February, 1905, by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit (135 Fed. 750), it is held that where an equitable estoppel is relied upon the facts upon which it is based must be proved with particularity and precision; and nothing can be supplied by inference or intendment. It was further held that in the absence of expressly proved fraud, there can be no estoppel based upon the acts or conduct of the party sought to be estopped, where such acts or conduct are as consistent with honest purpose and with absence of negligence as with their opposites.

Supreme Court of the District of Columbia,
HOLDING A PROBATE COURT.

IN RE ESTATE OF CAROLINE JENKINS HARRIS, DECEASED.

DECEDENTS' ESTATES; PRIMARY FUND FOR PAYMENT OF DEBTS; DEBT SECURED BY MORTGAGE.

1. The personal estate of a decedant is the primary fund for the payment of the debts, and the debts must be paid therefrom even though secured by mortgage upon the real estate.
2. Where, however, the debt secured by the mortgage is not the personal debt of the decedent, the rule does not apply; and the debt so secured is a charge upon the real estate, which becomes the primary fund for its payment.
3. Where the decedent purchased real estate subject to a mortgage, and nothing more appears, the personal estate is exonerated from the payment of the mortgage debt to the extent of the real estate security; but if the decedent made the debt his own the personal estate becomes primarily liable for its payment.
4. A purchased real estate, giving notes secured by mortgage of the property for part of the purchase money, which notes were indorsed by B. Subsequently A conveyed the property to B subject to the mortgage, and B died without the mortgage having been discharged. In the settlement of her estate, held that B did not make the debt her own so as to make the personal estate the primary fund for its payment, but that the mortgage debt was payable out of the proceeds of the mortgage property.

Admn. No. 11,932. Decided March, 1905.

HEARING on demurrer to a petition by the husband of a decedent to have the personal estate exonerated from payment of a mortgage indebtedness. Demurrer overruled.

Mr. E. Hilton Jackson for the petitioner.
Mr. R. H. McNeill for the respondents.

Mr. Justice STAFFORD delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a petition by the husband of the decedent asking to have the personal estate declared free from the payment of a debt secured upon a parcel of real estate by deed of trust. The petitioner is entitled to so much of the personal estate as shall remain after the payment of the decedent's debts. Dist. Code, sec. 1160.

It appears from the petition, which is demurred to, that the administrator was authorized by this Court to sell this piece of real estate for the payment of debts, the personal estate proving insufficient therefor, and that he has sold the same, and paid the trust debt out of the proceeds. It is alleged that the administrator in his account is about to reimburse himself for the payment of the trust debt out of the personal estate, thereby depriving the petitioner thereof, as the trust debt is greater in amount than the whole of the personal estate after the payment of the personal debts, and the prayer is that the administrator be instructed to the contrary. The history of the trust debt is not stated with as much fullness and particularity as might be desired, and embraces only the following facts, viz., that the trust deed was placed on the property on the 22d day of January, 1901, by Exum P. Lewis; that the notes secured by the trust deed were endorsed by the decedent before delivery; that on the same 22d day of January, Lewis sold the property, subject to the trust, to the decedent; that the deed was recorded on the 4th day of February, 1901; that the notes were payable in three years from date, and were protested at maturity for non-payment. It appears from other files in the estate that the decedent died in December, 1903, before the maturity of the notes. It does not appear how said notes read upon their face other than as above stated, nor for what reason or upon what consideration the decedent endorsed them, nor how it happened that Lewis conveyed the property to the decedent upon the same day that he executed the deed of trust. It is said in oral argument by the demurrant that Lewis was a relative of the decedent, and really purchased the property for her, but there is nothing of this kind upon the record. So far as the court is informed by the files, it is merely a case where the decedent has purchased real estate subject to a mortgage, being originally bound as the endorser before delivery upon the trust notes. We must assume that her obligation upon the notes was secondary to that of Lewis, who was primarily bound to pay them.

There is no doubt that the personal estate is in general the primary fund out of which debts of the decedent are to be paid, nor that the personal estate must pay the debts, even though they be secured by mortgage upon the real estate. But it seems to be equally well settled that when the debt secured by the mortgage is not the personal debt of the decedent, the rule does not apply, but, on the contrary, the debt so secured is a charge upon the real estate, which becomes the primary fund for its payment. So where the decedent has purchased real estate subject to a mortgage, and nothing more appears, the personal estate is exonerated from the payment of the mortgage debt to the extent of the real estate security. If, however, the decedent made the debt his own, as it is said, the personal estate becomes liable primarily for its payment. See the authorities cited below.

So that the real question here is, whether Mrs. Harris, the decedent, did make this obligation her own? It does not appear that she assumed the mortgage in the conveyance which she received from Lewis, nor in any other way, except by endorsing the notes. It is alleged in the petition that the property was conveyed to her "subject to the mortgage," but not that she assumed it. The question is then narrowed down to this: Did the decedent by endorsing the notes make the debt her own so as to charge her personal estate with its payment? The cases do not furnish a harmonious answer to the question, What treatment of the debt by the purchaser will make it her own? Some hold that even the assumption of the mortgage debt by the purchaser of the premises will not have this effect. Creisey v. Willis, 159 Mass. 249. Others hold to the contrary. Thompson v. Thompson, 4 Ohio St. 333.

One case goes so far as to decide that even the guaranteeing of the mortgage notes by the purchaser will not make the debt the debt of the purchaser within the meaning of the rule.

In the case last referred to the purchaser had assumed the payment of the mortgage by a clause in the deed to him, and upon the transfer of the mortgage to a new holder had guaranteed the payment of the mortgage notes in writing upon the back thereof as a consideration for the transfer, and yet it was held that he had not made the debt his own so as to charge his personalty with its payment, his guaranty being merely a collateral undertaking not affecting the original agreement between the mortgagor and the holder of the mortgage. This case, if followed, would determine the one before us in favor of the husband, the petitioner. Greesy v. Willis, 159 Mass., p. 249, decides that merely assuming the mortgage debt is not enough to transfer the charge from the real to the personal estate, and that such a result is not accomplished even by the purchaser waiting upon the mortgagee, and inducing him to delay foreclosure, nor by his paying the interest.

In Lenning's Estate, 52 Pa. St. 135, 138, it is said that the purchaser taking land already charged with a mortgage does not ipso facto make the debt his own or subject his personalty to its payment, and that the same rule prevails even where the party so taking the land gives his own bond or covenant for the payment of the encumbrance if it be done only as a new security or as auxiliary or merely to relieve the land from the pressure of the encumbrance. In such cases, it is said, equity looks upon the land as still the principal security and the undertaking of the purchaser as merely collateral, and it will compel payment out of the land in relief of the personalty; but that when the heir or devisee makes the mortgage debt his own, as by a new mortgage to the mortgagee, or when a purchaser assumes the debt as a part of the price of his purchase, and thus makes it his own, the rule is different.

The reasoning of the cases which hold that assuming the mortgage as a part of the price makes the debt chargeable upon the personalty is that the personalty has been increased to this extent by withholding so much of the price. If one purchasing real estate borrows of a third person and mortgages the land to him to secure the payment of the loan, there is no question that the personal estate is chargeable. It is not easy to discover any real difference between such a case and a case where the purchaser assumes the mortgage debt, thereby in effect borrowing of the original mortgagee, or of the person from whom he purchases the equity. There certainly is no difference in legal principle, unless in the latter case it can be said that the purchaser has not bound himself personally to the mortgagee for the payment of the debt. In Thompson v. Thompson, 4 Ohio St. 333, it was determined that the purchaser of an encumbered estate, if he agree to take it subject to the encumbrance, and an abatement is made in the price on that account, is bound to indemnify his grantor against the encumbrance whether he expressly promised to do so or not, a promise to that effect being implied from the nature of the transaction, and that in such a case his personalty is chargeable with the mortgage debt; but such is not the general course of authority.

Another decision that the assumption of the mortgage debt is sufficient to make it the purchaser's own so as to charge his personalty is found in O'Connor v. O'Connor, 88 Tenn. 76.

Woerner in his work on "The American Law of Administration," at page 1104 lays down the rule as follows, citing thereto the authorities we have just considered: "At common law the personalty being the primary fund for the payment of debts, the heir or devisee may call upon the executor to exonerate the land by discharging the mortgage debt out of the personal estate, on the ground that the personal estate had the benefit of the money for which the mortgage was given. But the testator may indicate the fund out of which the mortgage debt shall be paid, or devise the land cum onere; and the rule does not apply to estates purchased by the testator or intestate while under the encumbrance, unless he has made it his own debt."

In the case before us it is clear that the decedent did nothing to make the debt her own at any time subsequent to the endorsement of the notes. She did not make it her own merely by taking the land subject to the mortgage. At the time of her decease she was under a contingent liability to the mortgagee by reason of her endorsement, but even if no conveyance of the land had been made to her, she would have been entitled to be reimbursed out of the trust estate in case she had been obliged to pay the trust notes as endorser, for the principles of equity would have entitled her to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee. This is remarked only to show that by endorsing the notes she did not make the debt her own in such a way that her personal estate would have had the debt to pay before the mortgage security had been exhausted. In other words, her personal estate would not have suffered by reason of her having endorsed the notes, unless the real estate proved insufficient to reimburse her.

In our judgment the situation is the same now, and the trust debt must be paid from the proceeds of the sale of the trust property. Consequently the demurrer must be overruled and the petition adjudged sufficient.

Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

HYTER MYERS, APPELLANT,
v.
THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

BOARD OF SCHOOL TRUSTEES; POWER TO CONTRACT.

The board of school trustees is without power to bind the District of Columbia to the payment of services rendered for the public schools, in the absence of any appropriation providing for the payment for such services or of express statutory authority granted to them to make such contracts.

No. 1448. Decided March 7, 1905.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at Law, No. 46,553, entered upon a demurrer to the declaration in an action to recover compensation for services additional to his employment as janitor of a school building. Affirmed.

Mr. J. H. Ralston, Mr. F. L. Siddons, and Mr. W. E. Richardson for the appellant.

Mr. A. B. Duvall and Mr. F. H. Stephens for the appellee.

Mr. Justice DUELL delivered the opinion of the Court:

ment entered after hearing the case upon a demurrer to the amended counts of the declaration. As originally filed the declaration contained five counts, three of which were withdrawn and the remaining two amended. As amended the first count of the declaration in substance charges that the appellant, the plaintiff below, on October 1, 1891, being then in the employ of the appellee as janitor of Manual Training School No. 2, was requested by a member of the board of school trustees, and with the approval and consent of said board, to perform the duties of assistant engineer; that no compensation was agreed upon but that the appellee by its said agents promised and agreed to pay him for such additional services a reasonable compensation and upon the strength of which promises he continued to work; that he faithfully performed the duties requested of him and acted as assistant engineer until July 23, 1901; that the performance of the duties by him were known to and accepted by the appellee; that many times during the performance of such services he requested of the appellee payment for his work, to which answer was made that he could not then be paid but eventually would be; that because of this extra work he was obliged to have a helper during a great portion of the time, whom he paid out of his salary as janitor; that the value of his services as assistant janitor was $30 per month or a total for the entire time of $3,532, for which, with interest from July, 1901, with costs, he claims herein, having demanded payment from the appellee, which was refused.

The second amended count differs from the first only in alleging an employment as night janitor from October 15, 1891, to July 23, 1901, the other averments of the count being the same as in count 1 and judgment being demanded for a similar amount, with interest.

The demurrer runs to the entire amended declaration and presents these matters of law:

"1. That the board of trustees of the public schools had not, nor had any alleged agent of the said board of trustees, authority to bind the District of Columbia to the payment of any services rendered for the said public schools, in the absence of an appropriation providing for the payment of such services.

"2. The plaintiff has not alleged in its declaration any cause of action against the District of Columbia as a municipal corporation.

"3. And for other reasons apparent on the face of the declaration."

The first ground of demurrer raises the question of the power of the board of school trustees to bind the District of Columbia to the payment for services rendered for the public schools, in the absence of any appropriation providing for the payment for such services or in the absence of any express statutory authority granted to them to make such contracts.

The court below having sustained the demurrer, the appellant presents the following assignment of errors:

"1. The court below erred in holding that the board of trustees of the public schools had not authority to bind the defendant appellee to the payment of the services rendered by the plaintiff, as set forth in the first and second counts of his declaration, in the absence of an appropriation specifically providing for the payment of such services.

"2. The court below erred, if it so decided, that the plaintiff had not alleged in his declaration any cause of action against the defendant as a municipal corporation.

"3. The court below erred in sustaining said demurrer."

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that authority for the board of trustees to employ him as an assistant engineer and night janitor is found in the act of June 25, 1864 (13 Statutes at Large, 187), the material part of which, so far as it relates to the contention, reads as follows:

"It shall be the duty of the school board to provide suitable and convenient houses or rooms for holding schools for colored children, to employ and examine teachers therefor, and to appropriate a proportion of the school funds . . . to the building or renting of school rooms, and other necessary expenses pertaining to said schools, to exercise a general supervision over them, to establish proper discipline, and to endeavor to promote a thorough, equitable, and practical education of colored children in said portion of the District."

This provision of law was in force when the so-called "organic law" of the District, approved June 11, 1878, went into effect, which abolished the old board of school trustees and vested the authority to appoint a new board in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. After authorizing the appointment of such a board the act provided that said trustees should have the powers and perform the duties in relation to the care and management of the public schools which were then authorized by law. It further appears that said act imposed certain limitations upon the Commissioners, and these limitations are equally binding upon the school trustees appointed by the Commissioners. As it is stated in appellant's brief that the court below relied upon the section containing these limitations, we deem it best to set forth the material part of the section:

"And the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have power, subject to the limitations and provisions herein contained, to apply the taxes or other revenues of said District to the payment of the current expenses thereof, to the support of the public schools, the fire department, and the police, and for that purpose shall take possession and supervision of all the offices, books, papers, records, moneys, credits, securities, assets, and accounts belonging or appertaining to the business or interest of the government of the District of Columbia, and exercise the duties, powers, and authority aforesaid; but said Commissioners, in the exercise of such duties, powers, and authority, shall make no contract nor incur any obligation other than such contracts and obligations as are hereinafter provided for and shall be approved by Congress." 20 Stat. L. 103.

In the face of this prohibition neither the Commissioners, nor the school trustees acting for them, could justify the appointment of appellant as assistant engineer and night janitor and bind the District to his payment unless authority therefor be found in the said act or be approved by Congress. The argument of appellant is that the board of trustees appointed by the Commissioners were to have the same powers and duties relative to the care and maintenance of the public schools as, at the time of the passage of the act of 1878, was then vested in the then school trustees, and that authority is to be found in the act of June 25, 1864. It is claimed that such power is given by the clause "and other necessary expenses pertaining to said schools." When the act of June 25, 1864, is construed in the light of the act of June 11, 1878, we are far from being convinced that under the clause referred to the school trustees were authorized to exercise their discretion as to what were the "necessary expenses pertaining to said schools," and enter into all manner of contracts relating thereto, the money to pay which had not been appropriated by Congress. Conceding such power would open wide the doors for expenditures which would neither meet the approval of the Commissioners of the District nor of Congress. As is well said by counsel for appellee:

"It is a matter of common knowledge that the school estimates, like other items of public expenditures, are made up each year and transmitted by the Commissioners to Congress, and that the appropriations for the schools are based upon these estimates, some of them being passed entire, some cut down, and some stricken out altogether. The argument for the plaintiff, however, is that the board of school trustees may bind the District by a contract for services, although Congress has refused to appropriate funds for that very purpose. In other words, the board and not Congress is the sovereign authority in the District of Columbia as to such matters or as to any matters pertaining to the expenditure of public funds for the schools. The proposition being reduced to a question of power between Congress and the board of school trustees need not be pursued further. The conclusion is obvious."

Unless it appear that a court of competent jurisdiction has construed the act of 1864, when read in the light of the act of 1878, to warrant such contracts as the one in question, we do not feel justified in trying to spell out such a construction as here contended for, however much we may be impressed with the equities of the particular case before us. Rather it would seem to us the duty of a claimant, such as is the appellant, to look to Congress for relief rather than to the courts. The latter would not be justified in overruling the plain intention of Congress by vesting legislative duties in the Commissioners or in the board of school trustees selected by them. The long delay of appellant in attempting to enforce his claim is persuasive in showing that he performed his additional duties, knowing that he could not be paid without authority being given the board of trustees by Congress. The original declaration alleges "that he could not be paid at that time because of the necessity for congressional appropriation."

In The District of Columbia v. Bailey, 171 U. S. 161, the court, in referring to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, said:

" . . . These officers are without general power to contract debts or to adjust and pay the same; that, on the contrary, the statutes expressly deprive them of such power, and limit the scope of their authority to the mere execution of contracts previously sanctioned by Congress, or which they are authorized to make by express statutory authority. The necessary operation of these provisions of the statutes is to cause the District Commissioners to be merely administrative officers, with ministerial powers only. The sum of the municipal powers of the District of Columbia are neither vested in nor exercised by the District Commissioners. They are, on the contrary, vested in the Congress of the United States, acting pro hac vice as the legislative body of the District, and the Commissioners of the District discharge the functions of administrative officials."

And further on is to be found the following statement:

"It can not be doubted that if the District Commissioners themselves had seen fit to pass a resolution reciting that the appropriation by Congress for the improvement of the streets had been exhausted, and that a given sum of money was set aside to pay a claim for damages preferred against the District for having contracted when there was no appropriation, such action would have been, under the statutes, ultra vires."

By analogy, no more could the Commissioners, and much less the school trustees, exceed the appropriation for school purposes and enter into a valid contract with this appellant to employ him as assistant engineer and night janitor. Not only was there no money to compensate him, but, as above stated, he knew the fact. There was no contract made with him to pay him a specific sum. This fact, coupled with his failure to make any serious attempt to enforce his claim for a period of some ten years, shows the evils that would arise from attempting to override the express statutory enactments by a judicial construction thereof.

In the view we take of the case it is unnecessary to refer to the second or third counts of demurrer.

No error having been committed by the trial justice, it follows that the judgment of the court below should be affirmed with costs, and it is so ordered.

IDA DOTEY, APPELLANT,

v.

THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

SIDEWALKS; OBSTRUCTIONS IN PARKING; WATER PLUG; NEGLIGENCE.

1. The sidewalks of the city of Washington extend from the curb line bounding the carriageway of the street to the building line of the houses; they are wholly the property of the United States, and wholly subject to the municipal authorities of the District.
2. Whether a water plug be placed in the main sidewalk, or in the portion of the sidewalk leading to the house and known as the parking, it is the duty of the municipal authorities to see that it does not become a dangerous obstruction to those having occasion to use the sidewalk.
3. In an action for personal injuries, it appeared that between the granolithic sidewalk and the steps of the house there was a brick walk depressed some 6 or 9 inches below the granolithic sidewalk, and in this brick walk was a water plug about 1 foot from the lower step of the house which projected some 6 or 9 inches above the brick pavement. Plaintiff, in seeking to enter the house on a stormy night first stumbled over the depression in the brick walk, and then had her foot caught against the water plug, and was thrown against the steps and injured. Held, that the question of defendant's negligence was for the jury, and the trial court erred in directing a verdict for defendant.

No. 1488. Decided March 21, 1905.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at Law, No. 46,335, entered upon a verdict directed by the court in an action for personal injuries. Reversed.

Mr. J. H. Ralston, Mr. F. L. Siddons, and Mr. Eugene A. Jones for the appellant.

Mr. A. B. Duvall and Mr. E. H. Thomas for the appellee.

Mr. Justice MORRIS delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is a suit at common law, instituted in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, to recover compensation from the District for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff through the alleged negligence of the authorities of the District in permitting a defective condition of one of the sidewalks in one of the streets of the city of Washington. The facts of the case, about which there seems to be no substantial controversy, are these:

About 9 o'clock on the evening of April 13, 1903, when the weather was unpropitious and it was raining and blowing hard, the plaintiff, a seamstress, being on W street northwest, in the city of Washington, between Fourteenth and Fifteenth streets, and on the north side of W street on her way to visit at a house No. 1439 W street, wherein resided another seamstress, turned from the granolithic sidewalk to enter the house, and, there being a brick walk of about 3 or 4 feet between the granolithic sidewalk and the steps of the house, depressed some 6 or 9 inches below the granolithic sidewalk, and in this brick walk, a little distance from the center towards one side of the walk, and standing a little over 1 foot from the outer edge of the lowest step of the house, a water box or water plug projecting some 6 or 9 inches above the brick pavement, she first stumbled over the depression of the brick pavement, which in the darkness she had not noticed, and then had her foot caught against the water plug, and was thrown violently against the steps and was injured. There were two street lamps on the square, the nearest about 50 feet away; but the light, so far as it affected the locality of the plaintiff's accident, was more or less intercepted by a tree standing on the sidewalk. There was some "parking," as it is called, inside the line of the granolithic pavement and on both sides of the brick pavement leading to the house from the granolithic pavement. It appears in evidence that the walks had been in the condition stated for more than a year before the plaintiff's accident; that several persons had stumbled over the water plug before the plaintiff, and that a few days after the accident the place was fixed by bringing the sidewalk of brick up even with the water plug.

At the trial of the case there was testimony on both sides from which the foregoing facts appeared; and at the close of the testimony the defendant moved the court to direct the jury to return a verdict in its favor. The grounds of the motion are not stated in the record, and there is no opinion of the court from which the grounds can be learned. The appellant's brief alleges that they were: (1) That the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence; and (2) that the location of the place of the accident was outside of the public sidewalk. The motion was allowed, and verdict was returned and judgment rendered for the defendant. The plaintiff has appealed.

Undoubtedly there was error in the action of the trial court in directing a verdict for the defendant. There is no testimony whatever in the record before us tending to show contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, and that point has been abandoned by the appellee in the brief on its behalf, and the contention that the defendant is not liable for the condition of the water plug for the reason that it was outside of the public sidewalk and within what is designated as the parking, is wholly without merit.

The sidewalks of the city of Washington extend from the curb line bounding the carriageway of the street to the building line of the houses. They are wholly the property of the United States, and they are wholly subject to the control of the municipal authorities of the District of Columbia. That a portion of these sidewalks should be in a measure withdrawn from the public travel upon them and set apart as parking does not change or diminish in any manner the control of the District over them. This is a mere matter of convenience and of municipal ornamentation. Many things are allowed on the sidewalks, such as trees, carriage steps, grass plots adjacent to the curb line, fire-plugs, and the like, things of beauty or of convenience or of necessity, which of themselves impede travel, and yet are not nuisances, but of which everyone is bound to take notice. Wolf v. D. C., 33 Wash. Law Rep. 137; Howes v. D. C., 2 D. C. App. 188: 22 Wash. Law Rep. 41. And so, likewise, the portions of the sidewalks adjacent to houses, and known as parking, are withdrawn from general use by the public as sidewalks and are committed to the immediate care and custody of the adjacent owners or occupants. And it may well be that pedestrians wandering into these spaces, when they have been marked by being converted into grass plots, or otherwise in some distinctive manner segregated from the parts reserved for public travel, can not hold the District of Columbia liable for any obstruction which they may encounter there. But the parking, so called, from which the public travel is excluded, does not mean, and was never intended to mean, all the portion inside the general line of travel. The paths to the houses are as much parts of the sidewalks now as they ever were. The control of the municipal authorities over them is as complete as it has ever been. The adjacent owner may not disturb that path any more than he can any other part of the sidewalk without the consent of the municipal authorities. He may not pave it as he pleases. He may not substitute one pavement for another. He may not elevate or depress it, except with the permission of the municipal authorities. Indeed, even as to the grass plots, which actually constitute the parking, he must use them in entire subordination to the superior control of the municipality.

Then as to these water plugs, they are put down by the municipality, and the adjacent owner has no control over them and no right to interfere in any manner with them, except by permission of the municipal authorities, and whether they are placed in the main sidewalk or in the portion of the sidewalk leading to the house, if they are placed in either, it is the duty of the municipal authorities to see that they do not become dangerous obstructions to those having occasion to use the sidewalks.

The contention of the appellee would tend to throw upon the adjacent owner the burden of keeping the portion of the sidewalk leading to his house, and any water plug that may have been constructed therein by the municipal authorities, in safe condition. That is the necessary result of their argument, for if they themselves are not responsible, then the adjacent owner must, or at least should be, or else no one is responsible for dangerous obstructions on certain parts of the public highways of the city of Washington. The argument is not advanced in so many words, but that is the result of it; and the result is sufficient to show the absurdity of the contention.

These considerations are so plain and obvious that it seems strange to us that they were overlooked at the trial of the case. There is no substantial difference in principle between this case and that of Mosheuvel v. D. C., 191 U. S. 247, except that this case is a very greatly stronger one for the plaintiff. There was grave, although insufficient, ground in that case for the defense of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff; there is none whatever in the case under consideration. There is no reasonable ground for the denial of negligence on the part of the District in either. It is claimed that there is a difference, because in the Mosheuvel case the record shows the projecting water plug which caused the plaintiff's injury to have been "in the sidewalk," and it does not appear whether there was any parking in the street. But, as we have stated, this is of no consequence whatever.

We think that it was error to withdraw this case from the jury, and for this error the judgment appealed from must be reversed, with costs. The cause will be remanded to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia with directions to vacate the judgment and the verdict of the jury therein, and to award a new trial. And it is so ordered.

CHARLES WHITE, APPELLANT,

v.

POSTAL TELEGRAPH AND CABLE COMPANY.

COMMON CARRIERS; MESSENGER SERVICE; TRANSPORTATION OF MONEY.

1. A company engaged in the business of supplying messenger service to the public is in a certain sense and to a certain extent a common carrier, and liable upon proof of negligence.
2. There is no presumption that such a company assumes to act as a commont carrier in the transportation of money; and its assumption of that status must be affirmatively proved by the party alleging it.
3. Plaintiff's attorneys were furnished by defendant with a messenger to whom they delivered a letter addressed to real estate agents containing a request for a check. The agents, however, enclosed the amount in money in an envelope and delivered it to the messenger. The latter claimed to have delivered it to an employee of plaintiff's attorneys, but this was denied. It was not the custom of defendant to accept money for transportation; and the messenger was not notified that the envelope contained money. Held that the defendant was not liable, and the trial court properly directed a verdict in its favor.

No. 1517. Decided April 4, 1905.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at Law, No. 46,642, entered upon a verdict returned by direction of the Court. Affirmed.

Mr. G. L. Baker and Mr. E. B. Sherrill for the appellant.

Mr. W. W. Millan and Mr. R. E. L. Smith for the appellee.

Mr. Justice DUELL delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendant-appellee entered upon a verdict of the jury found by direction of the court. The action was brought originally in a justice court, where judgment was given for the plaintiff, and from that judgment an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, which resulted in the judgment which is now here for review. As is usual in this class of cases there were no written pleadings and the bill of exceptions presents all that is before us as to the form of the action and the various steps taken therein after it came into the Supreme Court of the District.

Upon the trial it appeared that Douglass & Douglass, a firm of lawyers, called a messenger from the office of the Postal Telegraph and Cable Company, a corporation doing business in the District of Columbia, a part of its business being that of supplying messenger service to the public. The boy was given a letter to deliver to Gasch Brothers and directed to get an answer. The letter was delivered to a clerk in the office of Gasch Brothers, who receipted for the same and also gave to the boy an envelope said to have contained $75. The clerk did not tell him that the envelope contained money, nor does she know whether he saw her place the money in it. He denies that he knew that there was money in the envelope and testifies that he gave what he received to a stenographer in the office of Douglass & Douglass, from whom he received the first letter. This is denied. There is a conflict of testimony as to when the loss of the money was first known to Douglass & Douglass, but the weight of evidence is that it was not known to the appellee until some two or three weeks after the occurrence. It appears that no receipt was taken by the boy when he claims to have delivered the answer. So far as appears, he was not furnished by the company with any blank for that purpose. It does appear however that later in the day of the transaction he was sent back to the office of Douglass & Douglass to get authority for the charge for the service to them and that such authorization was written on the back of the receipt signed by Gasch Brothers' clerk. It seems that Douglass & Douglass were the attorneys or agents for the appellant to collect interest, when due, upon certain notes, the makers of which made payment through Gasch Brothers. Witnesses called on behalf of the appellee testified that it was not its custom to carry money packages except at the risk of the owners, but it is admitted by them that no general or special notice of such custom is given to customers. For the services rendered by its messengers charges are made according to the distance covered and not according to the size or value of the letter or parcel.

In passing, it may be said that in all the larger cities there are now companies engaged in this line of service, and undoubtedly they are in a certain sense and to a certain extent common carriers. They must serve all who require their services impartially, and undoubtedly they are liable upon proof of negligence, and under some circumstances, and always by special contract, they may make themselves insurers.

It is strenuously contended by counsel for appellee that the action is wrong in form; that the action is ex contractu; that it should have been an action ex delicto. He cites Sanford v. American District Telegraph Co., 34 N. Y. Supp. 144, and Hirsch v. American District Co., which we find reported in 90 N. Y. Supp. 464. They bear out his contention, and the former case discusses the two forms of action at considerable length, and concludes that recovery could not be had in an action based on contract, but could, on proper proofs, be had in an action ex delicto. Leave was given to go to the Court of Appeals, but no appeal appears to have been taken. In the absence of a decision of a court of last resort, and still more because, in the absence of written pleadings and in view of the different and conflicting statements of counsel as to the grounds upon which the court directed a verdict, we do not deem it advisable to pass upon the question, but prefer to decide the appeal on other grounds. Conceding that appellee is a common carrier, we think it by no means follows that there was sufficient evidence to warrant or require the case to be submitted to the jury. The weight of authority is in favor of the proposition that there is no presumption that a carrier of the class to which the appellee belongs assumes to act as a common carrier in the transportation of money, and that the assumption of that status must be affirmatively proved by the party alleging it. Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, vol. 6, p. 258. In the case at bar it appears that it is not the custom of the appellee to accept money for transportation. The company was not informed of the nature of the service required, and beyond this it appears that the service required was not one involving the delivery of currency. On the contrary, the letter intrusted to the messenger called for something else. It said, "Kindly send check by bearer." Neither the appellee nor Douglass & Douglass authorized Gasch Brothers to send bank notes, or any other form of money by the messenger. We think it was negligence on their part to send money instead of a check, and, doubly so, without notifying the boy that the envelope contained money. The messenger was the agent of the appellee, and his custody was the company's custody, and his default the company's. The converse is equally true. Absence of notice to him was lack of notice to the company. While the messenger doubtless had authority to accept whatever was intrusted to him, he was without express authority to contract for the carriage of money, and, doubly so, with a third party. To what extent Gasch Brothers made the messenger their agent to deliver the money to Douglass & Douglass, and thereby relieved the appellee of any claimed liability, is an interesting question, but one not necessary to be here decided.

While there is more or less conflict as to the extent of liability of carriers of the class in question, we find a general line of cases which hold that, under the circumstances disclosed by this record, common carriers would not be liable. In Sewall v. Allen, 6 Wend. 335, it was held that a steamboat company which, by its act of incorporation, was made liable as a common carrier was not a common carrier of bank bills unless it were shown that it had made the carriage of such packages a part of its ordinary business.

In Chicago and Aurora R. Co. v. Thompson, 19 Ill. 578, it was held that the authority of an agent to receive packages and the like does not imply power to receive bank bills. To make a common carrier liable notice should be given that the package contains money.

In Hayes v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 23 Cal. 185, common carriers of letters enclosed in envelopes were held not liable for articles of special value contained in them unless informed at the time of the receipt of the letter of the value of its contents. This seems to us a salutary rule as applied to these so-called messenger companies. They employ lads, and when valuables are to be transported it is but fair that the employer should be informed of the nature of the service required so that it may select one of tried integrity. It was because the nature of the service required was made known to the company that it was held liable in American Dist. Tel. Co. v. Walker, 72 Ind. 454, cited by appellant. The boy also in fairness should be notified so that he may exercise necessary care.

There is little force in appellant's contention that by accepting 20 cents the appellee ratified the messenger's act in undertaking to safely transmit the money in question. The record discloses that the charge was entered on Douglass & Douglass' bill among other items, and presumably upon the date of the transaction, which was long before the loss was communicated to the company, and it would be a very harsh ruling that would predicate ratification on the fact that the bill was sent out without the cancellation of the item.

In the light of what the record discloses we are not prepared to say that the trial judge erred in directing a verdict for the defendant. He was justified in construing the evidence in the most favorable light for the defendant and we see no good reason for disturbing his ruling and much to warrant it.

The judgment appealed from should be affirmed, with costs, and it is so ordered.

Death of Mr. William J. Miller.

In the death of Mr. William J. Miller, which occurred at his residence in this city, on Monday, May 15, 1905, the bar of the District has lost one of its oldest and most honored members. Mr. Miller was in his seventy-third year, and had made his home in this city since boyhood. He began life as an employee of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, and while so engaged he studied law and was admitted to the bar. He was a member of the bar of the old Circuit Court of this District, and his death leaves but three such members surviving—Mr. Wm. F. Mattingly, Mr. Nathaniel Wilson, and Mr. Eugene Carusi. For a number of years Mr. Miller was associated with Mr. Carusi in the practice of the law. The partnership was dissolved in 1893, since which time he has practiced in connection with Mr. T. Percy Myers.

Mr. Miller was a lawyer of fine ability, and his personal character was of the highest type. Carriers—Injury to Passengers—Negligence of Conductor.

In Spinney v. Boston El. Railway, decided April, 1905, by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, 73 N. E. 1029, the action was for personal injuries received by a passenger on an electric street car. It appeared that plaintiff was standing in the car, all the seats being occupied, and was thrown to the floor because of a jolt of the car as it moved over a crossing. The evidence for the plaintiff tended to prove that she and the conductor were the only persons standing in the aisle, and that the plaintiff, after having been taken from her footing by the jolting, was hanging from a car strap when the conductor, thrown from near the front of the car to the place where she was standing, forcibly came against her, causing her to fall, he falling upon her; also, that the jolt or jolts were very violent, and were caused in part by the turning on of the electricity for the purpose of moving the tongue of an electrical switch, as well as by the crossing of the car over other tracks laid lengthwise in the street. On behalf of defendant there was evidence tending to show that there were other passengers standing in the aisle; that the conductor did not fall upon or against the plaintiff, and that there was no unusual or unreasonable jolt. The court held that the conduct of the conductor of a car, while in the car, is in a sense official conduct, for which the company is responsible to a passenger injured thereby, if such conduct—as in carelessly falling against him and injuring him—is negligence, regardless of whether the conductor is, in general, competent or incompetent, or whether or not the company might reasonably know of his incompetency.

Note—Bona Fide Purchaser—Discount by Bank.

In City Deposit Bank Co. v. Greene, decided April, 1905, by the Supreme Court of Iowa 103 N. W. 96, it is held that a bank, by discounting a note for a depositor and giving him credit for the proceeds on his deposit account, does not, so long as the deposit is not drawn out, become a bona fide purchaser, so as to be protected against infirmities in the paper. The trial court instructed the jury as follows: "Where a bank discounts paper for a depositor and gives him credit upon its books for the proceeds of such paper, it is not a bona fide holder for value, so as to be protected against infirmities in the paper, unless, in addition to the mere fact of crediting the depositor with the proceeds of the paper, some other and valuable consideration passes. Such a transaction simply creates the relation of debtor and creditor between the bank and the depositor, and so long as that relation continues and the deposit is not drawn out, the bank stands in the same position as the original party to whom the paper was made payable, even though the bank took the paper before maturity and without notice." It was held that this was a correct statement of the law.

It was further held that a note, though in form imposing joint and several liability on the makers, may be shown by the contract pursuant to which it was executed, to obligate each maker to pay only his proportionate share of the note.

A telegraph company receiving a message for transmission is held, in Swan v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (C. C. A. 7th C.), 67 L. R. A. 153, to be bound to notify the sender in case the line is obstructed so that the message can not be sent within a reasonable time, so as to give him an opportunity to avail himself of other modes of conveying the desired information to the sendee. A note to this case discusses the question of duty of telegraph company to notify sender of message if it can not be promptly transmitted or delivered.

To entitled the sendee to sue for failure promptly to transmit and deliver a telegram, it is held, in Frazier v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Or.), 67 L. R. A. 319, that the telegraph company must know, or be chargeable with notice, that the message is for his benefit.

The insertion in a renewal lease of a clause giving the tenant the right to remove trade fixtures is held, in Radey v. McCurdy (Pa.), 67 L. R. R. Co. v. Miller (Ga.), 67 L. R. A. 87, not to mitigate the damages due by the wrongdoer to the injured party for lost time. The subject of mitigation of damages for personal injury by fact that injured person has received from some source other than the wrongdoer money because of the injury is treated in a note to this case.

Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

BENJAMIN F. McCAULLY, APPELLANT, v. THE UNITED STATES.

CONTEMPT; CORRUPT SOLICITATION OF JUROR; PRESENCE OF COURT; EVIDENCE.

1. An attempt by corrupt solicitation to influence the conduct of a juror in a cause pending in court, made by the party charged therewith at his place of business, is a contempt committed in the presence of the court, within the meaning of section 725 Revised Statutes, and punishable as such.
2. Appellant was charged with a contempt of court because of an unlawful attempt to corrupt a juror therein. It appeared that two days before the trial of the cause in which the juror was sworn, which grew out of an embezzlement of railroad tickets, he had twice gone to the residence of the juror and expressed to members of the latter's family a desire to see him; that the juror went to appellant's place of business, and appellant then stated to him that there was a man in trouble; that a railroad company was trying to down him; that the juror then stated that he was on the jury and could not talk, and left the place. The only evidence on behalf of appellant was as to his good character. Held, that the evidence was sufficient to establish the charge against appellant, and that the court had jurisdiction, under section 725 Revised Statutes, to punish him for a contempt committed in the presence of the court.

No. 1529. Decided April 17, 1905.

APPEAL by respondent from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, finding him guilty of a contempt of court. Affirmed.

Mr. A. A. Birney and Mr. H. F. Woodard for the appellant.

Mr. Morgan H. Beach and Mr. J. S. Easby-Smith for the appellee.

Mr. Justice MORRIS delivered the opinion of the Court:

The appellant was adjudged in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to be in contempt of that court for an unlawful attempt to corrupt a juror therein, and thereby corruptly to influence the administration of justice; and from the judgment therein rendered against him he has appealed to this court.

The proceedings were commenced by the filing of an affidavit by one of the assistant attorneys of the United States for the District of Columbia on January 13, 1905, wherein it was alleged, partly upon information and belief, in substance that the appellant, on November 26, 1904, with reference to a cause of the United States v. Samuel Gassenheimer, set down for trial in that court on that day, had corruptly attempted to influence one Benjamin F. Shaw, who was at the time a juror in that court and liable to be called as such in said cause. Therepon a rule to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt of court was issued and served, with a copy of the affidavit, upon the appellant. The latter appeared and moved to quash the rule; but the motion was overruled. Then he pleaded "not guilty," and testimony was taken both for and against him, upon which the court made the following finding:

"The court doth find from the evidence as follows: That, upon the 26th day of November, 1904, there was pending in the court here a certain indictment, No. 23,253, wherein the United States was complainant and one Samuel Gassenheimer was defendant, which indictment duly charged him, the said Gassenheimer, with a criminal offense against the law of the District of Columbia; that he, the said Gassenheimer, had theretofore pleaded 'not guilty' thereto; that, upon said 26th day of November, 1904, the said indictment, and the issues joined upon said plea, stood regularly upon the calendar of this court for trial upon the 28th day of November next ensuing; that upon the 19th day of September, 1904, the regular petit jury for the October term, 1904, of this court was duly summoned, and on the 6th day of October, 1904, qualified and empaneled; that one Benjamin F. Shaw was one of those regular petit jurors for said term, himself duly summoned, qualified, and empaneled, and so had continued and was such upon said 26th day of November, 1904; that all aforesaid was on said day known to said Benjamin F. McCaully; that, on the said 28th day of November, 1904, the said indictment and the issues arising upon said plea thereto came on for final trial in the court here before the Hon. Dan Thew Wright, justice, and the jury; that a petit jury was duly empaneled from amongst said regular jurors and sworn to try the same; that said Benjamin F. Shaw was one of the said jurors so empaneled and sworn; that on said 26th day of November, 1904, said Benjamin F. McCaully did address and talk to the said Benjamin F. Shaw of and concerning the said criminal cause so as aforesaid by indictment pending between the United States and Samuel Gassenheimer, criminal No. 23,253, with the corrupt intent and purpose at the time upon the part of him, Benjamin F. McCaully, unlawfully and corruptly to influence him, the said Benjamin F. Shaw, in the discharge of his duty as a juror as aforesaid, and with the intent at the time upon the part of him, the said Benjamin F. McCaully, thereby corruptly to obstruct the administration of justice in the cause so pending between the United States and the said Samuel Gassenheimer; and the court finds that he, the said Benjamin F. McCaully, did thereby unlawfully and corruptly undertake and attempt to obstruct the administration of justice, and that he is guilty of a contempt of this court; whereupon it is considered and adjudged by the court that the said Benjamin F. McCaully is guilty of a contempt of this court, and it is considered by the court that for his said offense the said Benjamin F. McCaully be imprisoned in the United States jail in and for the District of Columbia for the period of six months, to take effect from and including the date of his arrival at said jail."

The testimony was reduced to writing, and a bill of exceptions was taken by the defendant, whereby it appeared that, upon the conclusion of this testimony, he moved for the discharge of the rule against him on the ground that the court, as he claimed, was without jurisdiction to try him in a summary way without a jury, and that the evidence did not support the charge. The motion was overruled, and he excepted; and the cause is now before us for review.

It is conceded, and it could not well be denied, that an attempt corruptly to influence a juror in a cause pending in court, is a contempt of court and a most serious offense against the administration of justice. But the contention here on behalf of the appellant is, as it was in the court below: 1st. That there is no sufficient proof of the appellant's guilt, and 2d. That in any event, inasmuch as the alleged offense was charged, and the fact appeared in the evidence, to have been committed at a place remote from the court house and from the place where the court was sitting at the time, the court below was without jurisdiction to try the appellant and punish him without presentment by a grand jury and verdict of a petit jury in the usual mode of the administration of the criminal law. Of course, if either one of these propositions is well founded in law, the appellant should be discharged. But we are of opinion that neither one is tenable.

1. With reference to the first proposition, that of the supposed insufficiency of the testimony to sustain the charge against the appellant, it is true that at first sight the testimony is apparently meagre. But upon closer examination it will be found ample to constitute a prima facie case against the defendant, which he has made no effort to overcome. We may assume that the record contains the substance of all the testimony given in the case, although it does not in terms purport to do so, as it should when it is desired to have the ruling of the appellate court on the whole case. Gunnison County Commissioners v. Rollins, 173 U. S. 255. With the exception of some testimony to show good character on behalf of the defendant, the evidence is exclusively that given on behalf of the prosecution, and it is wholly uncontradicted. It shows that two days before the trial of the case, in regard to which the alleged influence was sought to be used, the defendant called twice at the residence of one of the jurors, and expressed to members of his family a desire to see him, the juror himself not being at home at the time; that thereupon the juror went to the defendant's place of business to know what he desired; that the defendant then stated to him that there was a man in trouble; that a railroad company was trying to down him; and that the juror then stated that he was on the jury, and could not talk, and walked out of the place of business. The case referred to was the case of United States v. Gassenheimer, which grew out of an embezzlement of railroad tickets from the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company; and it was shown that the appellant was personally and intimately acquainted with Gassenheimer; that on the trial of that case he had testified on behalf of Gassenheimer as to his honesty and good character, and that in his testimony in that case he had denied calling at the house of the juror.

The defendant made no attempt to break the force of this testimony. He did not take the stand himself as a witness, and he contented himself with the presentation of a certificate of good character from some of his associates. If his business with the juror had been legitimate it would have been easy for him to say so, and to state what that business was. But it is very clear that his purpose was to corrupt the juror and to influence him unduly in the case mentioned in which it was probable that he would serve, and in which he did actually serve, as a juror. There can be no other reasonable inference from the testimony, and we think, therefore, that the testimony was sufficient to prove the appellant's offense.

2. The appellant's second proposition, namely, that the court was without jurisdiction to punish the appellant's offense, even if it was sufficiently proved, is based upon certain provisions of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which are taken to limit and restrict the power of the Federal courts to punish for contempts of their authority. These provisions are contained in sections 725 and 5399, which are taken from an act of Congress of March 2, 1831, 4 Stat. 488, and which are in the following terms:

"Sec. 725. The said courts (of the United States) shall have power to impose and administer all necessary oaths, and to punish by fine or imprisonment, at the discretion of the court, contempts of their authority; provided, that such power to punish contempts shall not be construed to extend to any cases except the misbehaviour of any person in their presence, or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice, the misbehavior of any of the officers of said courts in their official transactions, and the disobedience or resistance by any such officer, or by any party, jury, witness, or other person, to any lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree, or command of the said courts."

"Sec. 5399. Every person who corruptly, or by threats or force, endeavors to influence, intimidate, or impede any witness, or officer in any court of the United States, in the discharge of his duty, or corruptly, or by threats or force, obstructs or impedes, or endeavors to obstruct or impede, the due administration of justice therein, shall be punished by a fine of not more than five hundred dollars, or by imprisonment not more than three months, or both."

It is argued that the appellant's offense, if we assume it to have been proven, is not punishable under section 725, under which the court proceeded in this case, as well as under the common law, inasmuch as it was not committed "in the presence of the court, or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice," but at a distance from the court at the appellant's place of business, a half a mile or more away; but is punishable under section 5399 after a jury trial in the regular way, as all other offenses are tried and punished. It is admitted that it could be punished summarily under section 725, if committed within the court house, even in an obscure and out-of-the-way corner of it, or at or outside of its portals; because then it would come within the letter of the statute. The claim is that the place of solicitation of the juror being far removed from the court house, the statute expressly removes the act from the cognizance of the court as an act of contempt, and simply leaves it to be punished as an ordinary criminal offense under section 5399.

We can not assent to this view of the law. There is no possible difference between the corrupt solicitation of a juror at the court house door, or in the corridors of the court house, or in some obscure nook of the building, and a precisely similar corrupt solicitation at the home of the juror or the place of business of the corrupter. The offense is no greater in the one case than in the other, and its influence upon the administration of justice is precisely the same in both cases. We can not think that, in the enactment of the statute in question, Congress had any intention to institute a topographical discrimination between acts which have no possible relation to the matter of greater or less distance from the court house. As was said by Mr. Justice Brown of the Supreme Court of the United States, when sitting in the District Court, in re Schulenberg, 25 Fed. Rep. 211, the words of the statute "seem to refer rather to riotous or unseemly conduct in the court room, or in such immediate proximity thereto as to interrupt the sessions of the court or the orderly conduct of the business therein, and not to embrace constructive contempts of its authority." And the action of the appellant was at least a constructive, if not an actual contempt of the authority of the court.

In the determination of the question here involved we are not greatly aided by the adjudicated cases. In no one of them has this precise point arisen or been determined. In the case of Savin, 131 U. S. 267, it was held that an attempt in the court house to deter a witness from testifying was a contempt of court committed in the presence of the court and punishable under section 725 of the Revised Statutes. In the case of Cuddy, 131 U. S. 280, there was, as in the present case, an attempt corruptly to influence a juror, but the court notes the fact that it was not made to appear in the record where the act was committed, whether in the presence of the court or at a distance from it, and it specially reserved any determination of the question which is now before us. It was said by Mr. Justice Harlan, speaking for the court, in the conclusion of the opinion:

"Whether the attempt to influence the conduct of the juror was or was not, within the meaning of the statutes, misbehaviour so near to the court as to obstruct the administration of justice, however distant from the court building may have been the place where the appellant met him, is a question upon which it is not necessary to express an opinion."

In the case of one Brule, in the United States District Court for the State of Nevada, 71 Fed. Rep. 943, there was a contempt of court by the bribery of a witness to hide himself and remain away from the court. The act was done at a considerable distance from the court house, and yet it was held to be punishable as a contempt under section 725. This case is directly in point, and yet not so strong as that now before us, because, if we may recognize grades in such offenses, the corrupt solicitation of a witness is not as grave an offense as the corrupt solicitation of a juror.

By the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Cuddy, the question before us is left an open one, and it is incumbent upon us to determine it as best we may in the absence of authoritative enunciation from our tribunal of last resort. Upon reason and analogy and with due regard, as we think, both to the letter and the spirit of the statute, we are of opinion that, in the contemplation of the statute, the appellant's act was committed in the presence of the court. As we have intimated, the question is not one of geography or topography, of propinquity or remoteness, but one of direct influence upon the administration of justice. The administration of justice is equally obstructed wherever the act is done; and the place of the solicitation is absolutely of no consequence whatever. Whether the act was done in the court house, or a mile or one hundred miles away, the result is precisely the same; the disturbance to the court is precisely the same. The act in its nature is not one dependent upon location for its greater or less influence on the administration of justice. A riotous disturbance in the court house, or so near thereto as to disturb the proceedings of the court, is a very different thing from a riot five or ten miles away, which by no possibility could interfere with those proceedings. In the case of such a disturbance the matter of location is a most important circumstance. But the bribery of a juror or the intimidation of a witness pollutes the fountains of justice at their source, and reach at once to the very seat and shrine of the administration of justice, whatever be the place where the formal act is done. Under such circumstances the court is wherever the juror or the witness is; and there is no question of locality in the case.

It often happens, and it was the general usage in former times, that juries are kept together during the trial of important cases, and are taken to their meals to hotels or restaurants at some distance from the court house. If while at such distance from the court house, can it be that, if they are corruptly solicited, the person who seeks to corrupt them is not guilty of contempt of court to be punished summarily as a contempt? And if, in trials extending over several days, they are permitted to disperse at night and go to their own homes, as is now usually the custom, can it be that corrupt solicitation of one of them at his own home is less a solicitation, and less an obstruction of justice, than if the solicitation were had within the purlieus of the court house? We find no good reason for any such distinction. Every juror is part of the court wherever he is. Under our common law the jury is as much a part of what may be designated as the machinery of the administration of justice as is the judge, and a corrupt attempt to influence the jury, or any individual member of it, is an offense differing only in degree from a similar attempt to corrupt the judge. Judge and jury are component parts of the court. An attempt upon the integrity of the jury or upon the integrity of any individual juror, is a direct attack upon the court, and the court is entitled to protect itself from all such attacks by the methods which the common law has established for the purpose, namely, by the way of summary proceedings for contempt of court.

Now, if it be true, as it seems to us to be, that an attack upon the integrity of an individual juror is an attack upon the integrity of the body to which he belongs—for it only requires the corruption of one to destroy the efficiency of the whole—and such attack, therefore, is a direct attack upon the court, how can it reasonably be argued that the act has not been done in the presence of the court? We scarcely know how it could come nearer home to being an obstruction to the administration of justice.

We are not unmindful of the considerations, so forcibly emphasized by counsel, which led to the enactment of the act of Congress of March 2, 1831, now embodied in the Revised Statutes as sections 725 and 5399, or of the great wrong that might sometimes be done by violent or irritable judges in the exercise of the somewhat arbitrary, and almost of necessity, autocratic power possessed by courts of justice to punish summarily for contempts of their authority. It is unfortunate that this power has sometimes been abused or used oppressively; but the abuse of the power, although it has been said, and very properly said, that there is no place in our governmental system for the exercise of irresponsible power, is no sufficient reason against the exercise of the power in proper cases. Its existence is essential for the existence of courts themselves. In no other way can they insure their efficiency or conserve their usefulness. The writ of habeas corpus will generally secure the individual citizen from oppression. But it is necessary at the same time to preserve unimpaired the power of courts of justice to punish for contempts of their authority. The one is just as essential as the other to the preservation of civil liberty; for civil liberty and the due administration of justice are necessary concomitants of each other.

There has been no question made of our right to entertain the appeal in this case, and we make none ourselves.

From what we have said it follows that the order appealed from must be affirmed. And it is so ordered.

Affirmed.

MADISON WHIPPLE, APPELLANT, v. EUGENE E. GADDIS, USE, ETC.

APPELLATE PRACTICE; QUESTION NOT RAISED IN TRIAL COURT.

There is no ambiguity in the expression "existing incumbrances," used in a deed of conveyance; and even if the expression "certain existing incumbrances" is ambiguous and open to oral explanation, the refusal of the trial court to allow defendant to state in what sense the parties used the words "existing incumbrances" will not be held error when the record fails to show that its attention was called to the use of the word "certain" in connection therewith.

No. 1502. Decided April 4, 1905.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at Law, No. 45,823, entered upon a verdict directed by the court in favor of plaintiff. Affirmed.

Mr. C. A. Brandenburg, Mr. E. C. Brandenburg, and Mr. F. W. Brandenburg for the appellant.

There was no appearance for the appellee.

Mr. Justice DUELL delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is an appeal taken from a judgment, in favor of the plaintiff-appellee, entered upon a verdict found by a jury upon the direction of the court.

The record is somewhat meager, and as there were no written pleadings we are somewhat in the dark as to some of the events that may have been developed in the presentation of the case in the trial court.

It appears that the plaintiff originally brought suit in one of the justice courts of the District to recover the sum of $150, a balance alleged to be due him upon the sale and purchase of certain real estate. A judgment for the full amount, with interest and costs, was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, which was thereafter assigned to Campbell. Thereafter a second trial was had in the Supreme Court of the District, and under the instructions of the court, the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff-appellee for the full amount claimed, with interest and costs. A motion for a new trial was made, denied, and judgment upon the verdict ordered.

The assignment of errors, other than the general one that the court erred in directing the jury to return a verdict for the plaintiff, are these: First. In refusing to permit the appellant to explain to what incumbrances the expression "certain existing incumbrances" mentioned in the deed, referred. Second. In holding, as a matter of law, that the appellant was bound by the terms of the deed to assume the incumbrances, including taxes and assessments.

In order to decide whether these assignments of error are well founded, or even warranted, we must turn to the record to learn what transpired at the trial. The plaintiff was the only witness called in his own behalf and he testified that he sold the defendant certain houses for $300; that the defendant paid one-half of this amount and refused to pay the balance; that there were two trusts upon each house. Upon cross-examination he was shown the deed which showed that he had made certain incorrect statements which, however, have no special bearing on the point in controversy. The deed was delivered at or prior to the time of the payment of the one hundred and fifty dollars, but the examination of the title had not then been completed by the Columbia Title Company. The defendant, the only witness called in his behalf, gave his version of the transaction and testified, without objection, that the plaintiff assured him that the taxes were paid, but if anything was due he would pay. This, upon being recalled, and without objection, the plaintiff denied. The deed which was received by defendant and by him promptly recorded, discloses that the property was sold subject to "certain existing incumbrances." The defendant was asked upon his direct examination "in what sense the words 'existing incumbrances' was used by them" (the parties) "in the deed for the houses." The court, of its own motion, refused to permit the witness to answer the question on the ground that the understanding of the witness was incompetent as the writing spoke for itself. The first assigned error purports to be based upon this ruling, but upon comparing it with the record it will be seen that there is a fatal variance between them. The appellant was asked to explain the sense in which the words "existing incumbrances" were used, while the error is predicated upon the court's refusal to permit the witness to explain the expression "certain existing incumbrances," quite a different expression as admitted by appellant's counsel. He says, "It is undoubtedly the law that a covenant against incumbrances generally, or against 'any' or against 'all' incumbrances, covers taxes, general and special, assessed against the property at the time of conveyance." In the case at bar it appeared after the deed was delivered that there were taxes and assessments unpaid and outstanding against the property, and the appellant based his refusal to pay the balance of the purchase price upon this fact. There is no ambiguity, patent or latent, in the expression "existing incumbrances," and the court was clearly right in refusing to permit the witness to explain the the meaning of that term in the deed.

The record fails to disclose that the attention of the court was called to what is contended to be a qualifying word, i. e., "certain" and we have no right to assume anything which does not appear in the record. We must take it as presented and decline to pass upon a question not raised below. The first assignment of error is not based upon anything appearing in the record and is therefore found not to be well taken.

As to the second alleged error which is claimed to follow from the ruling of the court that the appellant was bound by the terms of the deed to assume the incumbrances, including taxes and assessments, we can only say that, as the objection to this ruling was a general one and not specific, we must find that it was based upon the ground that "existing incumbrances" did not cover taxes and assessments. Such a contention is not well founded. Taxes and assessments are incumbrances. There is nothing in the record to warrant a conclusion on our part, that, conceding for the sake of argument that the word "certain," as used in the deed, is ambiguous and open to oral explanation, the attention of the trial court was called to that word. The objection as made was general and did not point out the present contention of appellant. We do not feel required to nor justified in trying to find some ground for disturbing the ruling of the court below. There have been two trials, and two verdicts for the appellee, and in our opinion the judgment should stand. Appellant's ably considered brief deals with questions which are not presented by the record, and which, therefore, are in a certain sense moot.

We find no ground for reversing the judgment of the court below, and it is, therefore, affirmed, with costs.

Affirmed.

No. 1515. Decided April 4, 1905.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at Law, No. 46,498, on a case appealed from a justice of the peace. Affirmed.

Mr. Victor H. Wallace for the appellant.

Mr. John W. Echols for the appellee.

Mr. Justice MORRIS delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District, in a suit which originated before a justice of the peace, and it is a pertinent illustration of the inexpediency of the law which allows such appeals. It is understood that the costs incurred in bringing the cause here have very considerably exceeded the original amount in controversy. It is very true that sometimes in cases involving only small pecuniary amounts as important principles are involved as in cases of far greater magnitude as to amount. But we venture to suggest that such cases would be better reached and the purposes of justice better subserved by a modification of the law so as to place appeals from justices of the peace on a basis analogous to appeals from the Police Court, or to the matter of special appeals under the statute, which might be preferable.

The appellant here had a claim against one Archer L. Hood, an optician, for $68.40, and sued him and obtained judgment before a justice of the peace. A writ of fieri facias was issued to the marshal; and the marshal levied upon certain personal property in a store on F street, in this city, owned by the appellee, Petersen, who conducted there a jeweler's establishment. The property seized and taken by the marshal into his possession consisted of one grindstone, one picture, one electric motor, one switch board, shafting, and belt, of the value in all of about $60 or $70. These articles the officer removed from the place on F street, and placed them for sale under the execution at the place of business of an auctioneer on Pennsylvania avenue. All this happened between May 9 and May 22, 1903.

The judgment debtor then made claim for the property as exempt from execution; and trial was had of this issue before a justice of the peace, and judgment was rendered for the claimant. But a new trial was allowed, and on the new trial judgment was rendered for the creditor, Brown, and against the claimant, Hood, and the claimant appealed to the Supreme Court of the District. This was on June 4, 1903. The appeal would seem to have been abandoned.

Then the appellee Petersen came in and made claim to the articles levied upon. He gave written notice of his claim to the marshal on June 27, 1903; and the marshal gave notice to the justice of the peace, which was filed before the latter on July 1, 1903. Trial was set for July 7, 1903, but there were various delays and postponements and judgment was not rendered until September 30, 1903. It was adverse to the claimant, and he appealed to the Supreme Court of the District. There the case was tried de novo by the court with a jury, and testimony was heard for both sides, and the court at the close of it directed a verdict for the claimant and entered judgment in pursuance of the verdict. Upon a bill of exceptions, reserved at the trial, the creditor Brown has now appealed to this court from that judgment.

The bill of exceptions purports to contain all the evidence that was given in the case. It consists of the testimony of three witnesses, Petersen on his own behalf, the auctioneer for the defendant Brown, and the claimant's counsel for Petersen in rebuttal.

Petersen's testimony was to the effect that in April of 1903 he rented part of his store on F street to Hood for $25 a month, payable in advance; that he soon found that Hood was unable to pay in advance, and he (Petersen) demanded security; that Hood thereupon delivered to him as security the articles which he brought to the store and which are the articles before mentioned as levied on afterwards by the marshal; that he took the articles and placed them on his own side of the store, where they remained until the marshal levied upon them; that when the deputy marshal came to seize them the witness told him that he held them as security for rent to the amount of $50 then due to him from Hood, and would not give them up until his claim was paid; that the deputy marshal insisted upon taking them anyhow and told him that he (the witness) might put in a claim for them; and that the sum of $50 was then due as rent, which since then had been increased to $150.

For the defense the auctioneer, to whom the marshal had delivered the goods for sale, testified that he had sold them on June 27, 1903; that the electric motor had been bought by one Lease for $10, its full value; that the other articles had been purchased for Petersen by Hood as his agent for $51, of which $5 had been paid at the time of sale, and the residue remained unpaid; and that the articles so purchased by Hood for Petersen yet remained at the place of business of the witness.

In rebuttal it was testified that notice in writing of Petersen's claim was given to the marshal by Petersen's attorney on June 27, 1903.

1. The appellant contends that the appellee's claim was not made until July 1, 1903, and that it was too late, as the articles levied on had then been sold. But the testimony is that the appellee's claim was made to the marshal on June 27, 1903; and that the goods were sold on the same day. There is nothing in the record to show whether the sale was before or after the receipt of notice by the marshal, but as the law recognizes no fractions of a day, unless the circumstances demand it and there is testimony to the point, we must assume that the notice and the sale were simultaneous, and therefore that the notice was in due time. The marshal's notice to the justice of the peace that the claim had been made and the auctioneer's retention of the articles sought to be sold, must be regarded as corroborative evidence that the claimant's notice was received in due time to stop the sale.

2. The appellant's next contention is that the appellee did not show such property in the goods in question as entitled him under the Code to maintain a claim of ownership. But this contention is without foundation in the law. The appellee had a lien on the property for the payment of his rent, which was something more than the tacit lien given to a landlord by the statute; and he had it in his actual possession as the qualified owner of it, subject to the divesting of his right by the payment of the claim. Now, it is elementary law, which needs no elaboration of argument or citation of authorities in support of it, that a person in possession of property under a lien is the owner of it against all the world and even against the actual owner until his claim is paid; and no one, not even the actual owner, has any right to disturb his possession, without previous payment of such claim. There is no doubt whatever that the appellee was entitled to maintain this proceeding. Nor was he precluded from maintaining it by his becoming a purchaser at the marshal's sale. His action in that regard was no more than a prudent precaution to save the property from sacrifice.

3. In the third place, the appellant contends that the jury might not have believed Petersen's testimony; that they were the sole judges of the facts, and that, therefore, the cause should have been submitted to them for their determination; and it is argued that there were several suspicious facts about the case which the jury should have been allowed to consider, and which might have had weight with them. Undoubtedly the case was not above suspicion as to some understanding between Petersen and Hood; but that understanding may have been entirely proper and legitimate, and it has long since been well established in our law that suspicion is not proof and can not be allowed to take the place of proof. The appellant's contention would require that every case of uncontradicted and unimpeached testimony should be submitted to a jury, when there is no countervailing testimony. But this is not the law. The law is that positive testimony uncontradicted and not inherently improbable is prima facie evidence of the fact which it seeks to establish it, and the jury is not at liberty to disregard it. Crane v. Morris, 6 Pet. 598; Kelly v. Morris, 6 Pet. 622; United States v. Wiggins, 14 Pet. 334; Quock Ting v. United States, 140 U. S. 417; Alexandre v. Machan, 147 U. S. 72.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment appealed from must therefore be affirmed, with costs.

And it is so ordered.

Affirmed.

That a defect in a street is part of the original plan of construction, is held, in Stone v. Seattle (Wash.), 67 L. R. A. 253, not to relieve the city from liability for injuries to travelers caused by it.

A residuary devise to testator's widow is held, in Waldron's Petition (R. I.), 67 L. R. A. 118, not to pass title, as against his children, to a burial lot upon which members of his family are buried. The character of estate or property of owner in burial lot is considered in a note to this case.

Officers of a corporation who secure subscriptions to its stock by fraud are held, in Mack v. Latta (N. Y.) 67 L. R. A. 126, to be properly joined in an equitable suit against the corporation to enjoin collection of the amount unpaid, and to secure the return of what has been paid upon the subscription.

A carrier transporting freight on platform cars to a station where it maintains a freight house, but no agent, is held, in Normile v. Northern P. R. Co. (Wash.), 67 L. R. A. 271, to be obliged to place the freight in the house in order to relieve itself from liability for freight lost through theft, unless it shows that it is not able to do so.

Where the same five persons compose both the directorate and the body of the stockholders of a corporation, it is held, in Crichton v. Webb Press Co. (La.), 67 L. R. A. 76, that two of these persons can not, by joining with a third, enter into contracts with the corporation, or fix their own salaries, or vote allowances to themselves, over the protest of their two other associates.

An attempt to break up the business of loan agents, and to secure their custom, by a rival, by statements that they are inattentive and neglectful, and have been guilty of fraudulent conduct for which their principal has taken the business from them, and that they are insolvent, is held, in Brown v. American Freehold L. M. Co. (Tex.), 67 L. R. A. 195, to give them a right of action for the injuries thereby inflicted upon them.

A lease by a corporation, engaged in the business of generating and furnishing electricity for public and private use, to a rival corporation in the city, for a period of ten years, of machinery and appliances used in generating electricity, by which it obligates itself not to engage in such business in the city during such period, and not to dispose of any of its property, machinery, or appliances retained by it for producing or generating in such city electric light and power, is held, in Keene Syndicate v. Wichita Gas E. L. & P. Co. (Kan.), 67 L. R. A. 61, to be in contravention of public policy and not sufficient to sustain an action to recover rents by the lessor or its assignee.

A railroad conductor, in signaling the engineer to back the engine for the purpose of effecting a coupling, is held, in Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Baldwin (Tenn.), 67 L. R. A. 340, to act in his capacity as representative of the master, and not as a fellow servant of the brakeman, who is attempting to prepare the cars for the coupling; so that the master will be liable in case he acts negligently to the injury of the brakeman.

Placing an electric light in close proximity to a trolley wire at a curve is held, in Nelson v. Narragansett Electric Lighting Co. (R. I.), 67 L. R. A. 116, not to be the proximate cause of an injury to one struck by glass falling from the globe when shattered by a trolley leaving the wire, since failure to keep the trolley on the wire is prima facie negligence, and is the act of a responsible person intervening between the placing of the light and the injury.

One who accepts an agency to take charge of a house and lot belonging to his principal, collects the rents, pays taxes, and sees to repairs, and gives advice as to the value of the principal's unimproved farm lands, is held, in Van Dusen v. Bigelow (N. D.), 67 L. R. A. 288, thereby to assume a fiduciary and confidential relation, and to have no right to purchase such farm lands for himself without making full disclosure of all facts bearing on their value, material for the principal to know in order to act intelligently.

Promotions in the Office of the Corporation Counsel.

Mr. A. Leftwich Sinclair, for some time past second assistant in the office of the corporation counsel of this District, has been appointed to the position of special assistant, provided for by Congress at its recent session, to have charge of the settlement of claims for damages against the District on account of changes of grade incident to the elimination of grade crossings. The appointment is a most desirable one, and in bestowing it upon Mr. Sinclair the Commissioners of the District have acted wisely. He is admirably equipped for its important duties. As second assistant corporation counsel, Mr. Sinclair had charge of all condemnation proceedings in behalf of the District, and his present appointment is a testimonial to the ability with which he discharged those duties.

It is understood that Mr. Francis H. Stephens, at present fourth assistant to the corporation counsel, will be promoted to the post of second assistant. Mr. Stephens is a lawyer of ability, and the promotion comes to him solely on the ground of merit. The vacancy caused by his promotion will be filled by the appointment of Mr. James Francis Smith, a member of the bar of this District, and who will prove a capable and efficient assistant.

THIS WEEK'S DECISIONS OF THE COURT OF APPEALS.

Obstructions in Streets; Delivery Wagon in Front of Business House.

In Probey v. District of Columbia, a conviction of the plaintiff in error in the Police Court for an alleged obstruction of the street by permitting a delivery wagon to stand in front of his place of business, was reversed. It is held, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Duell, that the owner or occupant of premises has the right to use the abutting street in a reasonable manner for the purposes of his business. Attention is called to the fact that the decision of the Court of Appeals in Gassenheimer v. District of Columbia, Wash. Law Rep. 197, had been announced ten days previous to the trial of the case in the Police Court; and that decision should have controlled the Police Court in its disposition of the case.

Partition—Construction of Will—Common Law Marriage.

In Travers v. Reinhardt, the suit was for partition, and the appeal was from a decree confirming the report of the auditor distributing the proceeds of sale. The principal questions involved were as to the construction of a will and whether there had been a valid common law marriage between a deceased devisee and one of the parties to the suit, who claimed to be his widow. The auditor held that the language of the will was plain, leaving no room for construction, and that the validity of the alleged marriage depended on the laws of New Jersey, where the alleged husband was domiciled at his death, and that according to the laws of that State the marriage was valid. The decree below is affirmed, in an opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Shepard.

Pure Food Law; Refusal of Dealer to Sell Sample of Milk.

In District of Columbia v. Garrison, it was sought to review a decision of the Police Court acquitting the defendant on a charge of refusing to sell a sample of milk to a health department inspector. The case involved a construction of section 6 of the act of Congress of February 17, 1898, relating to the adulteration of foods and drugs in this District. It appeared that the refusal was to sell a smaller quantity than that usually sold to a customer; and the Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Morris, affirms the decision of the Police Court, holding that a dealer is not required to sell less than the amount usually sold to customers.

French Spoliation Claims; Attorneys' Fees Lobbying; Services.

In Waggaman, administrator, v. Earle, administrator, a decree of the court below confirming a report of the auditor was reversed, and the cause remanded for restatement of the account. The proceeding grew out of what are known as the French spoliation claims, and was a suit for an accounting brought by the administrator of the claimant against the estate of the attorney who had prosecuted the claim. The Court of Appeals holds that the allowance by the auditor of certain items was improper, for the reason that the services rendered were lobbying services. Mr. Justice Morris delivered the opinion of the Court.

Deed of Trust Note; Failure of Sale to Satisfy; Agreement to Release Residue.

In Ubhoff v. Brandenburg et al., trustees, the appeal was from a judgment upon a verdict directed for the plaintiff in an action to recover an alleged balance due on a note secured by deed of trust. It appeared that a sale of the property had failed to realize the amount of the debt. It was claimed by defendant that it had been agreed by one of the trustees—the other being absent from the District on account of illness—that if the property could be sold for an amount sufficient to pay the entire debt, the note would be surrendered; and that thereupon defendant procured a purchaser at a price sufficient for that purpose, to whom the property was conveyed. The Court of Appeals holds that this agreement was valid and binding on the plaintiffs, and therefore reverses the judgment and directs a new trial. The opinion is by Mr. Justice Morris.

Real Estate; Parol Agreement to Convey in Consideration of Services; Performance.

In Cherry v. Whalen the proceeding was to enforce a parol agreement whereby the owner of real estate promised to give the estate to complainant, either by deed or will, in consideration of her nursing and caring for his wife. The defendant denied that there was any such arrangement with complainant; but the court below found the agreement to have been made as alleged, and that there had been a performance thereof by complainant, and a decree was entered in her favor. The Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Shepard, affirms the decree.

Criminal Procedure; Taking of Evidence After Verdict Rendered.

In Raymond v. the United States the appeal was from a judgment entered upon a verdict finding the appellant guilty of criminal libel. The judgment was reversed on the ground that after verdict rendered and before sentence the prosecution was allowed to offer certain evidence which contradicted the testimony given by the defendant on the trial. The evidence was not offered for consideration by the jury, but to aid the court in determining the sentence to be imposed. The Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Morris, holds that, although this was its purpose, its introduction amounted to a reopening of the case, and was an irregularity which entitled the defendant to a new trial.

Embezzlement; Commission Merchants.

In Green v. United States, the appellant was convicted under an indictment charging him with converting to his own use the proceeds of certain produce consigned to him as a commission merchant. It was contended by the appellant that he was a broker and not a commission merchant; but the trial court instructed the jury that if they found that certain correspondence offered in evidence constituted the transaction between the shipper of the produce and the defendant, then as matter of law the defendant was a commission merchant. The Court of Appeals affirms this ruling, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Duell.

Embezzlement by Letter Carrier of Contents of Decoy Letter.

In Byram v. United States, the appellant was charged with secreting and embezzling the contents of a letter. The letter in question was a decoy letter prepared expressly for the purpose of entrapping him, and it was contended by defendant that the letter was not such as came within the purview of the statute. The letter, though bearing the postmark of a postoffice in one of the States, was in fact not mailed there, but prepared in this city. The trial court held, however, that the statute was applicable, and the Court of Appeals affirms its judgment, in an opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Shepard.

Decisions in Patent Causes.

In Lattig v. Dean (No. 298), the appeal was dismissed. Opinion by Mr. Justice Duell.

In re application of Craveling (No. 263), decision of Commissioner of Patents affirmed. Opinion by Mr. Justice Duell.

Jones v. Cooke (No. 293), decision of Commissioner of Patents affirmed. Opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Shepard.

Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

ANN E. J. CRUIT, APPELLANT,
v.
KATE DEAN OWEN ET AL.

WILLS; INTENTION OF TESTATOR; CONSTRUCTION OF DEVISE IN TRUST.

1. The intent of the testator is the first and great rule in the interpretation of wills. The attending circumstances of the testator, such as the condition of his family and the amount and character of his property, may and ought to be taken into consideration, in order to ascertain such intent.
2. Testator gave his estate to a daughter in trust for his wife for life, and from and after her death in trust for his four daughters, share and share alike, for life, for their sole and separate benefit, and from and after their death in trust for the child or children of each of the daughters in fee simple, such child or children, respectively, to take the share to which his, her, or their parent was entitled. If any of the daughters should die without having been married, her share to pass to her surviving sister or sisters for life equally, and upon her or their death the same to vest in her or their child or children in the same manner, for the same estate, and pass on her or their death as her or their original shares. The widow and two of the daughters died, both the latter being unmarried. Subsequently another of the daughters died, leaving surviving her two children. In a suit by said two children to construe the will, held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to one-half the net income of the estate during the life of the defendant, the sole surviving daughter of the testator, who was entitled to the other one-half thereof during life, and that the equitable title in remainder in the real estate was vested in plaintiffs, subject to have said title opened to let in any after-born child or children of the defendant.

No. 1506. Decided May 2, 1905.

APPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in Equity, No. 23,948, in suit to construe a will. Affirmed.

Mr. E. H. Thomas for the appellant.

Mr. Chapin Brown and Mr. J. P. Earnest for the appellees.

Mr. Justice DUELL delivered the opinion of the Court:

This appeal involves the correctness of the construction by the court below of the will of one Robert Cruit, who died November, 1861, leaving him surviving a wife, Catherine Cruit, and four daughters, Catherine E., then the wife of Samuel Owen, and three unmarried daughters, Susan, Ann, and Louisa. The will, executed September 1, 1858, was duly admitted to probate, and Susan, to whom the will was left in trust for certain purposes which will be hereafter stated, entered upon the administration of the estate and had charge of the same until her death, which occurred December 31, 1900. The widow died May 13, 1876; Louisa died January 2, 1876, and Catherine E. Owen died May 14, 1901. Susan and Louisa never married, nor has Ann up to the present time. Catherine E. Owen left her surviving three daughters, Evanina F. Mackall and these appellees, Kate D. Owen and Jesse Owen Gugle.

The will, in respect to which the controversy has arisen, is as follows:

"This is the last will and testament of me, Robert Cruit, of the city of Washington in the District of Columbia.

"First I give to my two nephews Edwin Cruit the son of George, and Henry the son of John L. Cruit, the legacy of one hundred dollars, to each of them, to be paid as soon after my death as may be. And all the rest residue and remainder of my estate, real, personal and mixed, whatsoever and wheresoever situated, I give devise and bequeath unto my dear daughter Susan Cruit her heirs executors and administrators upon the following trusts to wit In trust for my dear wife Catherine for and during her life, and to permit her to receive and take the whole income thereof after paying taxes repairs and insurance, and to apply and dispose of such net income as she my said wife may think proper and from and after her decease, in trust, as to my real estate for my dear daughters Catherine E. the wife of Samuel Owens, Ann Cruit, Louisa Cruit, and herself the said Susan Cruit, equally share and share alike, for and during their respective lives, for their own sole and separate benefit, free from the control of the husband of my said daughter Catherine and any husband or husbands she or my said other daughters or any of them may hereafter happen to marry, and not to be liable in any way for the debts of any such husbands, the receipts of my said daughters alone being a valid discharge And from and after their death in trust for the child or children of each of my said daughters then living in fee simple, such child or children respectively to take the share to which his, her or their parent was entitled And if any of my said daughters shall die without having been married, her share shall pass to her or their surviving sisters or sister for life equally; and upon her or their death the same shall vest in her or their child or children in the same manner, and for the same estate and pass on her or their death, as her or their original shares or share And as to my personal property, also given in trust as above expressed, I direct that the same shall, after the death of my said wife, be divided equally among all my said children, Catherine, Susan, Ann and Louisa share and share alike, and I accordingly give the same to them as aforesaid for their own sole and separate use

"And lastly I appoint my said daughter Susan Cruit sole executrix of this my last will and testament. And if my said daughter shall die or from any cause should become unable to act in the trust, I direct, that a trustee shall be appointed by the circuit court so that the trusts hereby created shall be at all times preserved and carried into effect

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this first day of September in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty eight. ROBERT CRUIT. [L. S.]"

The present value of the real estate is admitted to be over $100,000, and produces an income of some $11,000 or $12,000. The cause was heard upon the amended bill and the answers thereto of all of the defendants, and upon certain testimony which is of little or no value as an aid to the decision of the questions involved on the appeal. The court below decreed that under the terms of the will, the plaintiffs, Kate Dean Owen and Jessie Owen Cugle, and the defendant, Evanina F. Mackall, were, and are now, entitled to receive one-half of all of the net rents, revenues, and income arising from and out of the real estate devised by said last will and testament and mentioned in the bill of complaint, from, since and after the death of their mother, Catherine E. Owen, to wit, from, since, and after the fourteenth (14th) day of May, nineteen hundred and one (1901), and being the same proportion of all of the said net rents, revenues, and income which their said mother, the said Catherine E. Owen, was entitled to receive at the time of her death; that the said defendant, Ann E. J. Cruit, was and is entitled to receive during her life, from, since, and after the said fourteenth (14th) day of May, nineteen hundred and one (1901), the other and remaining one-half of said net rents, revenues, and income arising from and out of said real estate, and that the equitable title in remainder of all of the real estate devised by said last will and testament is now vested in the plaintiffs, Kate Dean Owen and Jessie Owen Cugle, and the defendant, Evanina F. Mackall, as remaindermen, and their respective heirs; subject to have the said title opened to let in any after-born child or children, if any, of the defendant, Ann E. J. Cruit, and subject also to the right of the said Ann E. J. Cruit to receive during her life one-half of the net rents, revenues, and income derived from said real estate as hereinbefore decreed, under the provision of said last will and testament.

The decree also appointed trustees under the will in place of Susan Cruit, deceased, the trustee named therein, and enjoined the appellant from thereafter collecting and receiving the rents and income of and from the property. Ann E. J. Cruit appealed, assigning the following grounds of error:

1. The court below erred by its decree that under the provisions of the will of Robert Cruit the said Kate Dean Owen, Jessie Owen Cugle, and Evanina F. Mackall were and are from the death of Catherine E. Owen entitled to receive one-half of the net rents, revenues, and income arising from and out of the real estate, devised by said last will and testament, and in not decreeing that the appellant was entitled to the whole of said rents, revenues, and income.

2. The court below erred in not construing said will so that from and after the death of her sister, Catherine E. Owen, the appellant became entitled to receive no more than one-half of the said net rents, revenues, and income.

3. The court below erred in not holding that Ann E. J. Cruit had an estate in fee simple in said real estate to the extent, at least, of one undivided half thereof.

4. The court below erred in its decree by placing the share and estate of the appellant in said real estate in the hands of trustees, as in said decree provided, and in its injunction against the appellant as in said decree contained.

5. The court below erred in requiring the appellant in this cause to account for and pay one-half of the rents which she may have collected since the death of Catherine E. Owen, prior to the appointment of said trustees, to them or to any person, and in distributing said rents as provided in said decree.

The parties are in accord in stating that the intent of the testator is the first and great rule in the interpretation of wills. All courts have for years recognized this rule, and this court since its inception has followed it. Smith v. Bell, 6 Peters, 68; Adams v. Cowen, 177 U. S. 471; Earnshaw v. Daly, 1 App. D. C. 21: 21 Wash. Law Rep. 669; De Vaughn v. De Vaughn, 3 Apps. D. C. 53: 22 Wash. Law Rep. 224; Holcomb v. Wright, 5 Apps. D. C. 83: 23 Wash. Law Rep. 24. Particularly applicable to the case at bar is the statement of the Supreme Court in Blake v. Hawkins, 98 U. S. 315–324, quoted by counsel for the appellant, that—"It is a common remark that, when interpreting a will, the attending circumstances of the testator, such as the condition of his family, and the amount and character of his property, may and ought to be taken into consideration. The interpreter may place himself in the position occupied by the testator when he made the will, and from that standpoint discover what was intended."

Let us, then, put ourselves as nearly as possible in the position of the testator at the time of the execution of the will and review the facts and surrounding circumstances, and little trouble will be found in fairly and correctly construing his will. In the fall of 1858 the testator was the owner of valuable real estate situated in the capital city of a rapidly growing country. His family consisted of his wife and four daughters, three of whom were unmarried, and the fourth then living with her second husband and being the mother of two female children. Naturally it was his desire to provide for his wife, his daughters, and such children as they had or might have. Such is the desire of every right-minded man bearing the relation to others of husband, father, and grandfather. There is no reason for inferring that any but the most loving relations existed between him and the various members of the family, for he refers to all whom he specifically names in the ordinary terms of endearment. His property consisted largely of real estate situated in a section of the city which required no more than ordinary foresight to see would naturally increase in value as the city grew, as the capital city of a great and growing nation necessarily must. The growth and consequent increase in value might be slow, but it was sure. Furthermore, all those living to whom he owed a natural duty were females. One was married, and for her husband it is easily spelled out that he did not wish him to have any control over the property. The other three daughters might marry and of their possible husbands he could know nothing. Such were "the condition of his family and the amount and character of his property." What would be the natural disposition of his property? What would any well-minded man do with real estate so situated, with a living wife and descendants, all of the female sex, three of his daughters unmarried and the daughters of the married daughter infants? Certainly he would desire to provide for his wife an ample support and leave her as the head of the family, to whom the children would look for their support, the grandchildren, such as there were or might be, in turn looking to their mothers for their support. Seeing the probable enhancement of value of the real estate and in order to prevent a dissipation of the property, and to make a provision for the support of all, with homes in the city and country, he would tie up the real property so that all of these objects might be secured. He would, in carrying out these objects, provide that the husband of the married daughter, and the possible husbands of the unmarried ones, should have no control over or rights in any of his property. He would vest a life interest in the income of his property for his wife and daughters with a remainder over to any grandchildren, so that the real property might go intact to them, and not by wills made by any of his daughters pass into alien hands.

It is the contention of the appellees that such was the intention of their grandfather, and that the will clearly sets forth such intention. The court below substantially so found and it becomes our duty to determine whether, in our opinion, such contention and decision are correct.

In considering the questions involved, we must, as we said in De Vaughn v. De Vaughn, supra, "read the whole will together, and give to each term employed its full and natural meaning; and no words of the testator should be rejected or refused their sensible meaning in the place where employed, unless it be required to make sense for the context of the will."

Turning now to the will, it is plain, as is admitted by all the parties, that the real estate passed in trust to the daughter Susan, who was to pay the net income to the testator's widow Catherine, who had the undisputed right to dispose of it as she saw fit; that at her death, which occurred in May, 1876, the income was to be paid, share and share alike, to the surviving daughters. Louisa having died the previous January, unmarried and without children, the net income would be divided in three parts and this would continue until the death of another daughter. Such event occurred December 31, 1900, when Susan, also without children and unmarried, died. From that time on the net income would be divided in two parts, one going to Mrs. Catherine E. Owen and the other to the appellant. May 14, 1901, Catherine E. Owen died, leaving her surviving three daughters, who took their mother's share, which at that time was one-half of the net income. It seems to us that it could not have been the intent of the testator that, after the condition had arisen under which one daughter was clearly entitled to one-half of the net income, upon her death her surviving children should not take her entire interest. It was not the testator's intention, as we gather it from the will, that upon the happening of that event, one-half of the net income received by the deceased daughter should revert to her surviving sister and only the other half (or one-fourth of the entire net income) go to her surviving children. We think it requires a strained construction to be placed upon the words of the will to force any such conclusion. The clause, "And if any of my said daughters shall die without having been married, her share shall pass to her or their surviving sisters or sister for life equally; and upon her or their death the same shall vest in her or their child or children in the same manner, and for the same estate, and pass on her or their death as her or their original shares or share," is unambiguous and can but mean one thing. That is, that when Louisa died, without issue, her interest passed to Susan, Ann, and Catherine; that when Susan died, without issue, her interest passed to Ann and Catherine; and that when Catherine died, leaving surviving children, her then interest, which was a one-half interest, passed to such children. To hold otherwise would defeat the intent of the testator as indicated by clear and apt words.

The plea of counsel for the appellant that the testator intended to give to the child or children of any married daughter the original share of such daughter had all the daughters survived the widow, and not the share that such married daughter was enjoying at the time of her death, is one that fails to impress us as being founded on anything but a technical nicety. The intent of the testator is to be gathered from a fair and reasonable interpretation of the language of the will. Thus, considering the terms employed, they mean that the entire interest of every nature that was vested in Catherine Owen at the time of her death passed to her daughters. It is only when an attempt is made to give a technical meaning to the word "their," as used in the phrase "their death," in the clause preceding the one we have quoted, that any difficulty of construction can arise. It is giving it a too technical meaning to construe it, when taken in connection with the following clause of the will, to mean that it refers to the death of all rather than to the death of each respectively. The testator was dealing with a known condition and not with a theory. He was employing ordinary words with their natural import, and not expecting that one word here and another there would be picked out and used to destroy his intention, as evidenced by taking the will as a whole. It is only when ultra refinement of expression is insisted upon that any ambiguity arises, and it naturally follows that when the construction of the will is approached from that standpoint that a half dozen interpretations can be placed upon it, as insisted by counsel for the appellant. We see no need, in construing this will, to wander afield and become lost in a maze. Nor does it seem necessary for us to cite authorities or distinguish between conflicting, or seemingly conflicting, decisions in order to arrive at a correct decision. Approached from a common-sense standpoint, the intent of the testator is clear and is as found by the court below.

Equally clear is it, in our opinion, that there is at the present time a trust estate, and that under the will it was the duty of the court below to appoint a trustee to take the place of Susan, the will expressly providing for such appointment when it directs, "And if my said daughter shall die, . . . I direct that a trustee shall be appointed by the circuit court so that the trusts hereby created shall be at all times preserved and carried into effect."

The assigned grounds of error are not well founded. It follows that the court below having made no error in its decree, it should be affirmed, with costs, and it is so ordered.

Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

WM. F. BOOGHER, APPELLANT,
v.
THOMAS W. ROACH ET AL.

No. 1494. Decided April 4, 1905.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at Law, No. 42,090, entered upon a verdict directed by the court in favor of the plaintiff. Affirmed.

Messrs. Mackall & Maedel for the appellant.

Mr. Walter C. Clephane and Mr. W. Mosby Williams for the appellees.

Mr. Justice MORRIS delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is a suit at common law instituted in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia by the appellant as plaintiff to recover compensation for "special services," alleged to have been rendered by the plaintiff to the defendants "as genealogist, examiner, and conveyancer, rendered in looking up, investigating, identifying, and locating the real estate belonging to the estate of Abraham Young, briefing the titles thereof, and in tracing, locating, and establishing the heirs of said Abraham Young, ascertaining their names, residences, degree of relationship, their respective interests, rights, etc., in and to said estate, and in the procuring of the necessary information to prepare the same, and in the preparation of deeds and contracts between the said heirs and the said trustees or defendants, or those preceding them, of great value to and made use of by said defendants; said services being rendered from, to wit, Nov. 1, 1888, to 1892,—$2,500"—as stated in the particulars of demand annexed to the plaintiff's declaration, which itself is in the common counts.

The same subject-matter of controversy was before us on a former occasion, in an equity suit instituted in the Supreme Court of the District by the appellant here as complainant against the appellees here and one other person, John L. Weaver, as defendant, to charge a certain trust fund for the payment of these same services. Boogher v. Roach, 12 D. C. App. 477: 26 Wash. Law. Rep. 297. There the bill of complaint was dismissed by the court below, and this court affirmed the decree of dismissal. In the opinion then rendered by this court it was said:

"While the acceptance of these services might have entitled him (Boogher) to an action of assumpsit against Roach, and even against Denver and Walter, we entirely agree with the learned justice who presided at the hearing that his claim therefor can not be made a charge against the trust estate or fund."

Acting upon what he assumed to be the intimation contained in this clause of the opinion, the appellant forthwith instituted the present suit at common law against Roach and Walter, General Denver having been dead for some time before. Roach and Walter severed in their pleadings; but their pleas, however, are substantially the same. They are the general issue, the statute of limitations, and former adjudication (in the equity suit mentioned), upon which the parties went to trial. At the trial it seems that the plaintiff alone offered testimony. That testimony, in the main, was substantially the same that was adduced in the equity suit, and which was set forth at some length in the opinion of this court in 12 D. C. App. 477. It need not, therefore, be here repeated. In addition to that, however, there was some additional testimony as to the value of the plaintiff's services, which certainly involved very great labor and research and must have been exceedingly useful to those who availed themselves of them.

The bill of exceptions taken in the case thereupon showed the following proceedings:

"The plaintiff to further maintain the issue joined upon his part offered to introduce in evidence before the jury the record in the chancery cause No. 21,842 in the name of Franklin H. Mackey et al. v. John H. Walter et al. to show that in the management of the estate the defendant Walter and those who are acting with him would receive 50 per cent of said estate and so much of the record as showed that the said John H. Walter as surviving trustee of Gen. J. W. Denver and John H. Walter trustees in the original deed of trust realized upon a large part of the real estate belonging to the heirs of said estates and had received various amounts which the complainant offered to prove by the record in said chancery cause and in other chancery causes relating to the subject-matter, and to which proffer the defendants objected on the ground that said testimony was irrelevant and immaterial and also upon the ground of the former adjudication pleaded in this case and the court refused to admit this testimony to be introduced before the jury and the plaintiff by his counsel excepted to this action of the court.

"Thereupon both the defendants moved the court to instruct the jury to find a verdict for the defendants upon the testimony introduced by the plaintiff upon the ground that the statute of limitations applied thereto and constitutes a bar to the plaintiff's right of action, which motion the court sustained and thereupon the plaintiff excepted to this action of the court and the jury thereupon rendered their verdict in favor of the defendant."

A motion for a new trial was made and overruled, and judgment was entered for the defendants; from which the plaintiff has appealed.

There are four assignments of error. One of them based upon the refusal of the court to grant a new trial need not be considered. The other three are, in effect—

(1) That it was error to refuse to permit the plaintiff to introduce in evidence the record of the chancery suit of Mackey and others v. Walter and others, for the purpose of showing that Walter and those acting with him would receive 50 per centum of the entire estate.

(2) That it was error to exclude from the evidence the records of other chancery suits which would show that Walter had realized upon a large part of the real estate and had received various amounts out of the same.

(3) That it was error to rule that the plaintiff's claim was barred by the statute of limitations.

Digitized by Google

We do not regard any of these assignments of error as well founded in law.

It is sought by the suit to enforce a joint liability, for the joinder of two or more defendants in a suit at common law, based upon contract, express or implied, can only be upheld upon the theory of joint liability. But there is no evidence whatever in the record before us of any joint liability on the part of the defendants. Between the appellant and the defendant Walter the record fails to disclose even the semblance of a contract. All that the record shows bearing upon Walter's liability is a part of the testimony of the plaintiff testifying as a witness on his own behalf, in which he says that in July or August of 1889, "at the request of Roach he turned all the papers over to General Denver, who turned them over to Walter, upon the promise that he was to be paid for his work;" and again that "he had never gotten any information from Walter, and indeed had never talked with him until after he had surrendered all the papers to General Denver, his cotrustee, and that he afterwards went to see Walter, and Walter said to witness that he ought to be paid when they had the money to pay with." This further statement from his testimony may also be cited:

"Witness also said that Walter had produced the papers prepared by witness in the equity cause of William F. Boogher v. J. L. Weaver, etc., and admitted that he got them from Roach; he also admitted that they had used them, and were still using them. The names in the recitals of the deed drawn by the attorneys for these trustees, Denver and Walter, are the same as shown by the work of witness."

How far the statement in this last cited portion of the plaintiff's testimony has any bearing on the present controversy we are not advised. We are not advised of the nature and purpose of the suit of Boogher vs. Weaver, etc., or what bearing that suit had on the present case. The natural inference from its title would be that it was a controversy merely between Boogher and Weaver as to their respective rights under the contract between them, and in no way involved the rights of any of the heirs of Abraham Young. If it did involve more than this it should have been set forth. This court can not ascertain from this record the contents of that suit. Apparently the papers referred to are papers prepared by the plaintiff for his own suit against Weaver, and it is not apparent why he should have compensation for them from Walter or from anyone else. If we were permitted to indulge in conjecture we might assume that this suit and the papers used therein, and to which reference is made, were part of the general scheme to recover property claimed by the heirs of Abraham Young, but we can not determine cases upon conjecture.

The other statements cited are no sufficient evidence on the part of Walter to pay the plaintiff for anything. The witness states that Walter said to him that he (witness) "ought to be paid when they had the money to pay with;" and we may well assume that this statement was true, and that the plaintiff should be paid. But it does not show that Walter promised to pay, or in any manner bound himself to pay, even if he used the material prepared by the plaintiff. There is no reason why he should not have used that material without liability on his part to any one, after it had been delivered to him, or to General Denver, by Thomas W. Roach, unless the use was under circumstances from which a promise from himself could have been implied. But there are no such circumstances.

It is true that the plaintiff also testified that "at the request of Roach he turned over all the papers to General Denver, who turned them over to Walter, upon the promise that he (plaintiff) was to be paid for his work." This promise evidently was the promise of Roach, and not the promise either of Denver or of Walter. Indeed it is very evident from all the testimony that there was no promise whatever, so far as this record discloses, from either Denver or Walter to pay the plaintiff for the material furnished by him. If the testimony implicates any one in such a promise, it is only the appellee, Thomas W. Roach.

But if we assume that Roach made such a promise, of which, perhaps, no doubt need be entertained, and if we assume, also, that the circumstances of the case will imply a promise by Walter to pay, yet the plaintiff's cause of action on either or both promises has long since been barred by the statute of limitations. The services, for which compensation is claimed, are stated to have been rendered from November 1, 1888, to 1892, and the plaintiff states that he turned over his papers to General Denver in May of 1890. The promise of Roach for payment and the alleged implied promise of Walter were both made at or about the same time. This suit was not instituted until April of 1898, nearly eight years afterwards. Plainly, therefore, the statute of limitations had intervened to bar the plaintiff's claim, however well founded it may have been in its origin. There is nothing whatever in the record from which a promise can be implied to keep the claim alive, or to make its payment contingent upon the realization of funds from the estate of Abraham Young. As we have seen, there was no promise whatever by Walter, but only an expression of opinion that the plaintiff ought to be paid whenever there was money wherewith to pay him, which can not reasonably be construed as a promise; and the promise of Roach was unconditional that the plaintiff should be paid for his work, which of course became barred in three years thereafter.

It is true that in the record there appears a contract in writing between Thomas W. Roach and others and John L. Weaver, in which the latter was to do the work for which, or for part of which, the appellant was afterwards employed, and was to receive a compensation of 10 per centum of the value of the property to be recovered, which was "to be paid in cash, or as may be otherwise agreed upon, upon the amounts as fast as obtained and disposed of at the value of the property when disposed of," and that afterwards, for an alleged consideration of $1,000, Boogher and Weaver contracted with each other that Boogher should do some of the work which Weaver had undertaken, and that he should receive therefor one-half of Weaver's fee. And this contract was ratified by Thomas W. Roach as trustee for himself and the other heirs. But this contract, even if it were not infected with the vice of champerty, as we intimated in the opinion in the case of Boogher v. Roach, 12 D. C. App. 477: 26 Wash. Law Rep. 297, is not the contract upon which the plaintiff sues. That contract was abandoned by Weaver in 1889, and renounced by the plaintiff himself soon afterwards. The suit is upon a quantum meruit, or an implied contract, resulting from the acceptance and use of the plaintiff's work, with the understanding that it should be paid for by the defendants at its proper value, not at the percentage stipulated in the Weaver contract.

It is very clear, therefore, that the plaintiff has no good and sufficient ground of action against Walter, and that his claim against Roach is barred by the statute of limitations.

It is argued, however, on behalf of the appellant that while the ruling of the trial court may have been right, as we here hold it was, upon the application of the statute of limitations as the record stood with the testimony excluded which he sought to introduce, yet, as that testimony would show when the property had been diposed of, the value of such property, and when the sums realized therefrom by the trustee had been realized, its exclusion was error. This assumption of what the excluded testimony would show is not supported by anything that appears in the record. The evidence which was excluded was that of a certain chancery suit between Franklin H. Mackey and John H. Walter and others, No. 21,842 in the Supreme Court of the District, and other chancery causes relating to the subject-matter. Of course, it is unnecessary to expend argument upon the proposition that there was error in the exclusion of "other chancery causes relating to the subject-matter." Such a statement as to proposed testimony is too vague and indefinite to be considered by an appellate court.

With reference to the record of the chancery cause which is more specifically mentioned, that of Mackey v. Walter, the offer was to show by it that Walter and those who were acting with him would receive 50 per centum of the estate, and that Walter had received various amounts from the estate. Assuming that this record was otherwise admissible, yet the offer was of testimony that was wholly irrelevant. The crucial difficulty in the plaintiff's case as to Roach is the statute of limitations; and there was no offer here to show anything that would take the case out of the operation of the statute. Under the plaintiff's theory of the case that his claim became payable only when there was money realized from the Young estate which should be applied to its payment, yet there was no offer to show when such money was realized. It is now argued that the record, if admitted, would have shown the time when such sums were realized. But this is mere assumption; nor would it have been of any consequence when such sums were received, unless the time of receipt was within the period of limitations. The proffer at the trial should have been to show by the record that these sums had been received at a time which would have taken the case out of the operation of the statute.

But even this proffer would properly have been rejected, for it would have been as irrelevant as that which was actually made. It would have been based on the Weaver-Roach contract or the Weaver-Boogher-Roach contract of 1889, which is not in this case, and not upon the implied contract upon which the plaintiff has brought his suit. There is not a scintilla of evidence in connection with this latter contract that it was to be performed only upon the realization of funds by the Young estate. Such may have been the intention perhaps, for an implied contract on a quantum meruit may be made to depend upon a contingency as well as an express contract, but there is no proof here of any such agreement or understanding, and in the absence of such agreement or understanding, services rendered under an implied contract are entitled to compensation immediately upon their conclusion.

The case of Hughes v. Eschbach, 7 D. C. Rep. 66, cited on behalf of the appellant, is not antagonistic to the views here stated. In that case it was held by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in general term that under the common counts of a declaration a contract in writing under seal could be given in evidence. But that is a very different thing from importing into a suit on the common counts one part of a discarded, abandoned, and champertous contract under which no compensation is claimed.

We are of opinion that there was no error in the rulings of the trial court, and that the judgment appealed from should be affirmed, with costs. And it is so ordered.

WARREN B. WILSON, APPELLANT,
v.
LESLIE M. SHAW, SECRETARY, ETC., ET AL.

INTER-OCEANIC CANAL; INJUNCTION TO RESTRAIN PAYMENT DENIED.

1. The lawful power of the United States to construct the proposed inter-oceanic canal across the Isthmus of Panama affirmed.
2. A decree dismissing a bill in equity to enjoin payment of the $50,000,000 authorized by the act of June 28, 1902, in connection with the construction of said canal, the bill alleging the unconstitutionality of the act, and that the treaty between the United States and Panama was null and void and conveyed no rights, affirmed.

No. 1582. Decided May 2, 1905.

APPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in equity, No. 24,573, dismissing a bill for an injunction. Affirmed.

The appellant in propria persona.

Mr. Morgan H. Beach and Mr. Charles W. Russell for the appellees.

Mr. Justice MORRIS delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is a suit in equity instituted in the Supreme Court of the District by the appellant as complainant, alleging himself to be a citizen of the United States and of the State of Illinois, and the owner of property therein subject to taxation by the United States, to enjoin the payment by the Secretary of the Treasury of the $50,000,000 authorized by the act of Congress of June 28, 1902 (32 Stat. 481), to be paid to the New Panama Canal Company of France, and for the acquisition of a strip of land across the Isthmus of Panama, in connection with the construction of the proposed inter-oceanic canal across that isthmus. The injunction is sought on the ground that the act of Congress is unconstitutional, and that the treaty between the United States and the Republic of Panama purporting to convey to the United States the rights deemed necessary for the construction of the canal, is null and void and actually conveys no such rights.

The bill of complaint sets forth the terms of the statute and of the treaty, but no facts not of public notoriety; and a recital of its allegations is therefore unnecesary. A demurrer to it was interposed on behalf of the Secretary of the Treasury; but there was no appearance for the Republic of Panama or for the New Panama Canal Company of France, and no attempt to issue any process against either. The demurrer was sustained and the bill was dismissed; and from the decree of dismissal the complainant has appealed to this court.

Undoubtedly it is the purpose of the parties to this cause, as it is their right, to seek the ultimate decision of the Supreme Court of the United States; and the decision of this court will be regarded by them as no more than a step in the progress of the litigation. Consequently, notwithstanding the vast interests involved and the questions of great magnitude raised by the complainant and most aptly presented by him both in brief and oral argument, we deem it unnecessary to follow him in that argument or to enter into any elaborate consideration of those questions. We will content ourselves with a brief statement of the general principles which we think should determine our decision in the case.

We take it that, in general, the construction of a canal stands upon no different plane from that of a railroad, or a turnpike, or any ordinary public road, so far as it concerns the right of a State to construct any one or more of them. They are all equally public highways, although with different conditions and different limitations. They are all avenues of communication which it has always been held to be the peculiar province of the State to construct, although it has often found it more convenient to construct them by private corporations organized for the purpose than by its own direct effort. That any State of our union may, within its own borders, construct such a highway in either one of the modes indicated, we presume is not judicially open to inquiry.

Neither can there be judicial question at this day of the lawful authority of the United States to construct such a highway, either road or canal, within the territory over which they have exclusive jurisdiction, such as the District of Columbia and the so-called territories of the United States. The United States authorized the construction of the great trans-continent lines of railroad through its own territory; and the lawful authority was not wanting to do the work themselves had it been deemed expedient. Similarly, if it had been deemed expedient at any time to construct a canal between the Mississippi River and the Pacific Ocean, and thus to bind the States of the Atlantic with those of the Pacific Coast, we do not see how the lawful power could be denied to the United States to construct such a canal, either by the agency of an organized company or directly on its own account by its own employes, so far as the work lay within the territory over which it had exclusive jurisdiction. And such power need not be derived from the constitutional authority to regulate commerce between the States and with foreign nations, but would be the inherent right of a sovereign acting within its own domain, and authorized to levy taxes for the general good and the common welfare of all the States.

Now, when outside of our former domain and yet so situated as to be appropriate for the purpose, the United States have acquired yet other territory, and propose to construct through it a canal to connect the Pacific and the Atlantic States, and to facilitate the commerce of both with each other and with foreign nations, why should their lawful power so to do be deemed less than if they sought to construct a similar canal through New Mexico and Arizona to connect the waters of the Colorado with those of the Gulf of California? If we own the requisite land across the Isthmus of Panama, we fail to see wherein there would be any greater constitutional inhibition against the construction of a canal there than there would be against a similar construction in Arizona or Alaska. The question, of course, is not one of expediency, about which men may well differ, and which it would be for Congress, and not for the courts, to determine, but one of lawful constitutional authority; and we see no reason, even under the strictest construction of the Federal Constitution, to doubt the lawful authority of the United States to open up a way of intercommunication within its own territory.

As already stated, the construction of highways is the special function, and even the duty of the State; and that function can not reasonably be denied to the United States in the places in which it is sovereign and has exclusive jurisdiction. In its sovereignty, in its exclusive jurisdiction, in its ultimate ownership of the soil, in its authority to levy taxes in order to provide for the general welfare, rather than in the authority vested in the Federal Government to regulate commerce, do we find the lawful power of the United States to construct an inter-oceanic canal.

But it is argued that on the Isthmus of Panama we have acquired neither the sovereignty nor the ownership of the soil that would be proper for the construction of a ship canal across that strip of land. There is undoubtedly some question left by our treaty with the Republic of Panama as to our sovereignty over the so-called "Canal Zone;" and it may be that the ultimate ownership of the soil of that "Canal Zone" is not vested in the United States. But we have acquired a right of way, which for all practical purposes is the equivalent of ownership of the soil; and we have acquired such extent of control over the territory as to constitute the substance, if not the name, of sovereignty. The court has been invoked to intervene as a court of equity; and courts of equity look at the substance rather than the form of things. Moreover, the executive and legislative departments of the Government, upon which the duty is devolved of negotiating treaties and enforcing them, have manifested their entire satisfaction with the treaty in question; and the courts should not be swift to find defects in it, since the purpose to be subserved is a public purpose almost exclusively within the cognizance of those two departments.

It follows in our opinion that the decree appealed from must be affirmed, with costs. And it is so ordered.

Affirmed.

A supreme court which has arrested a judgment of conviction in a criminal case because of a fatal defect in the indictment as presented to it, is held, in State v. Marsh (N. C.), 67 L. R. A. 179, to have the power, even after the close of the term, to grant the State an opportunity to correct the record so as to show that the alleged defect did not exist, and proceed to hear the appeal upon the corrected record. The amendment of a record to cure defect for which motion in arrest of judgment has been made is the subject of a note to this case.

COURT OF APPEALS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA:
Ida L. Rockwell, appellant, v. the Capital Traction Co. 338
The District of Columbia, plaintiff in error, v. Bushrod T. Garrison 345

Foreign Judgments—Right of Assignee to Sue in His Own Name Denied.

What is stated to be a decision of considerable importance, and the first construction by our local courts of Chapter XI of the Code of Law for this District, dealing with the assignment of choses in action, was made by Mr. Justice Barnard, holding Circuit Court No. 1, on May 26, 1905. The case was that of Thomas H. B. Dawson v. Mary J. Wright, executrix of the estate of Daniel Pratt Wright, deceased, at Law, No. 47,648. The plaintiff brought suit on thirteen separate judgments, aggregating about $3,200, recovered in Morgan County, West Virginia, and assigned to him by the respective plaintiffs therein. On behalf of the defendant a demurrer was filed to the declaration, on the ground that section 431 of the Code, authorizing the assignment in writing of judgments, etc., and giving the assignee the right to sue thereon in his own name, was applicable only to domestic judgments; and that the expression, "open accounts, debts, and demands," in section 433 of the Code, considered in connection with section 431, precluded the contention of the plaintiff's attorneys that the word "debts" was meant to cover an action on a foreign judgment. The court sustained the demurrer, and rendered judgment for the defendant for costs. Messrs. Millan & Smith represented the plaintiff, and Mr. E. A. Newman and Mr. W. Mosby Williams the defendant.

The Right of Privacy.

The doctrine announced by the majority of the Court of Appeals of New York, in Roberson v. Rochester Folding Box Company, 64 N. E. 442, denying the existence of what is referred to in that case as the "so-called right of privacy," is expressly repudiated by the Supreme Court of Georgia in the recent case of Pavesich v. New England Life Insurance Company, 50 S. E. 68. The opinion admits that there is an entire lack of precedent on the question, but it is said that the absence for a long period of time of a precedent for an asserted right is not conclusive evidence that the right does not exist. It is argued that the right of privacy is derived from national law and recognized by municipal law, and is embraced within the absolute rights of personal security and personal liberty. Liberty of speech and of the press are recognized as limitations upon the exercise of the right of privacy, but are held not to preclude the existence of that right. The right of privacy may be waived either expressly or by implication, but a waiver for one purpose or in favor of one person does not authorize an invasion for all purposes or by all persons with reference to the specific facts, it is held that the publication of one's photograph without his consent, as a part of an advertisement, is a violation of the right of privacy, entitling the person whose picture is reproduced to recover without proof of special damage.

Suretyship—Change of Contract.

In Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Boyette, decided in April, 1905, by the Supreme Court of Arkansas (86 S. W. 673), it appeared that a contract between a principal and his selling agent required the latter to make weekly reports of collections, etc. The agent gave a bond, with sureties, for the performance of the contract. Subsequently the agent was relieved by the principal from making reports except when she had made sales or collections, and only monthly reports were required. It was held that this action of the principal released the sureties from liability on the bond.

THE announcement is made that there will be no further jury trials in either of the circuit courts during the present term, except possibly on Monday, June 5. In the criminal courts jury trials will continue during the month of June, in order to dispose of cases in which the defendants are in jail.

Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

IDA I. ROCKWELL, APPELLANT, v. THE CAPITAL TRACTION COMPANY.

PRACTICE; BILL OF EXCEPTIONS; PERSONAL INJURIES; RELEASE; FRAUD IN PROCUREMENT OF; RETURN OF CONSIDERATION; EVIDENCE; DIRECTING VERDICT; CHAMPERTY AND MAINTENANCE.

1. In order to warrant an appellate court in determining whether there was error in giving or refusing an instruction to return a verdict the bill of exceptions must show that all the evidence has been set forth.
2. The bill of exceptions in the present case held substantially to comply with this requirement.
3. Where a release executed by husband and wife of a claim for personal injuries to the wife recites that it is "given under our hands and seals," and a seal is affixed to the signature of the husband, who first signed the release, but not to that of the wife, the presumption will be indulged that the seal affixed to his signature was adopted by her also.
4. The plaintiff in an action at law for personal injuries may defeat the operation of a release under seal pleaded in bar of her action by showing fraud in its procurement.
5. In order to avoid a release on the ground of fraud, the plaintiff must return or offer to return the consideration received therefor; but it is time enough to make the tender of the return of such consideration when the release shall have been pleaded in bar of the action.
6. The evidence on behalf of the plaintiff in support of the charge of fraud in obtaining her signature to the release, tending to show that at the time she was suffering considerable pain, and was weak, nervous, and weeping under the strain, and that she was induced to sign by the statement of her husband, who had previously signed the release, made in the presence of the agent of defendant without contradiction or explanation by him, to the effect that its execution by the husband made it operative to destroy any right of action she might have had, held sufficient to require submission of the issue to the jury; and the direction of a verdict for defendand held error.
7. The fact that plaintiff used the money received as a consideration for the release shortly after its receipt, held not a ratification of the release as matter of law, where at the time she used it she remained under the impression had when she signed the release.
8. A champertous agreement made by the plaintiff in an action for personal injuries with some third person for the maintenance of the action is no bar to a recovery; and, therefore, evidence tending to show that plaintiff had not furnished the deposit for costs, or the money tendered to repay that received as a consideration for a release, is inadmissible.

No. 1433. Decided March 7, 1905.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at law, No. 43,951, entered upon a verdict of the jury in an action for personal injuries. Reversed.

Messrs. Eugene Carusi & Sons and Mr. Charles H. Merrillat for the appellant.

Mr. R. Ross Perry for the appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice SHEPARD delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by Ida I. Rockwell while a passenger on the cars of defendant, November 15, 1898. The declaration was filed May 23, 1900. In addition to the general issue defendant pleaded a release executed by plaintiff and her husband under seal of November 23, 1898, wherein, for the sum of $85 paid them, they released and discharged the said cause of action. Replication filed February 26, 1901, denied under oath that the release was plaintiff's deed. On January 13, 1903, a mistrial was had, and the entry thereof recites that "plaintiff made a tender of the sum of money received by her from the defendant at the execution of the 'satisfaction' herein pleaded, with interest, which was refused." Thereafter the aforesaid replication was, by leave of the court, withdrawn and another substituted therefor. This alleged that the release had been obtained through misrepresentations made, and fraud practiced by defendant's agent; and, further, that plaintiff's husband had been induced to execute the same through fraudulent misrepresentations, and that plaintiff had likewise been induced to execute the same while sick and in a nervous condition, and through misrepresentations made to her as to the effect of her husband's discharge, she being ignorant of her rights, etc. The defendant thereafter withdrew its plea of the general issue. Issue was then joined upon defendant's pleas of release and accord and satisfaction, and upon the plaintiff's replication.

Plaintiff introduced evidence tending to show that on November 15, 1898, the car of defendant stopped to take on passengers; that, after she had taken hold of the handle bar and was attempting to enter the car, it was negligently started, and she was dragged and her arm badly strained; that she returned to her home and suffered great pain; that she was confined to her bed and house for some time, and had her arm bandaged by a surgeon; that she has continued to suffer great pain to the present time, and has been unable to labor, etc. Two surgeons testified to the injuries of the plaintiff, saying that her arm had been bandaged and placed in a plaster cast for about six months. They further said that an indentation in the hand was probably due to neuritis; that the injuries were severe and painful; and that plaintiff would probably recover in a year or two. Defendant introduced no evidence relating to the accident, but offered as witnesses two surgeons whose evidence tended to show that they had examined the plaintiff's arm in January, 1903, and found nothing to indicate that there was any neuritis at that time or effects thereof. Plaintiff also proved the former tender of $85 with interest, and renewed the same, including costs, which was again refused.

The case was made to turn upon the evidence relating to the execution of the release pleaded by the defendant. The release bears date November 23, 1898, and is a printed form designated for execution by one person. The blanks and certain interlineations made necessary by the double execution were written in by defendant's agent. In consideration of $85 it releases to the defendant all actions or causes of actions which "we or either of us now have against it by reason of an accident which occurred on the 15th of November, 1898, at Tenth street and Pennsylvania avenue N. W., Washington, D. C., resulting in injuries to my wife's arm," etc.

It concludes: "Given under our hands and seals this 23d day of November, 1898." It is executed first by W. G. Rockwell on a line at the end of which is printed the word "seal." Underneath occurs the signature of plaintiff thus: Mrs. Ida Rockwell [her X mark], and under the printed word "witness" is the signature, "Mrs. Irene Lucas."

It was undisputed that plaintiff's name was written by Irene Lucas, her sister, who also signed as the witness. The words "her mark" were written by defendant's agent. There is no seal of any description opposite the signature of plaintiff. Many pages of the record are filled with the examination and cross-examination of the witnesses introduced on the matter of the release, and the substance of the same will be given.

Plaintiff testified that she was in bed suffering pain when defendant's agent called about a week after the accident. He said that he represented the defendant and inquired of the accident, number of the car, etc. He also inquired as to her husband, his occupation, and place of business. Very little else was said. He returned next day about 2 o'clock. Plaintiff was in bed suffering pain; was in a nervous condition and had been taking medicine to relieve pain. Her sister, Mrs. Irene Lucas, and Mrs. Ready were in the room. He said the company wanted to do right; told him she did not know how badly she was hurt, and if not badly injured would only want her expenses. He repeatedly asked her to fix a price and she as often declined to do so. He asked if $50 would do and she made no answer, but turned her back. Mrs. Ready told him that plaintiff was in no condition to talk, was in no immediate need, and he would better come again when she was not so sick. He went away and returned about a half hour later with her husband. He came to the bed and said, "I have your husband's signature; will you give me yours?" She said, "No." He had not shown a paper before. He said, "I have your husband's signature; will you sign it?" She said: "No, sir; I will not." Her husband "ripped out that, 'You sent that man around there to me and made me make a —— —— fool of me—worse than that —, and now I have signed the paper, and your rights are gone, and if he goes away you won't get a penny with my signature on it.' My husband then ran down the steps, and slammed the door, and left me alone with the lawyer—with Mrs. Ready and them in the room, but he went out and left me. So I was awfully excited and nervous, and I raised up and said, 'Oh! I don't care what you do,' and I raised up as if I would sign, but whether I ever touched the pen—I don't remember even seeing the pen, and I know that I don't know one word on the paper. I have never seen it except as he came towards the bed with it to me." After what her husband had said the agent said nothing, but asked her to sign the paper. She said, "I don't care what you all do; I don't care what you do." She turned her back. Does not remember touching the pen or anything but raising up and then lying down. Had her face turned to the wall and was crying. Had not told the agent to see her husband and did not know that he was going to see him. She was not permitted to answer what her belief was then as to her rights after her husband had signed. That she gave no one authority to put her mark to the paper. She did not know if the agent offered money. She did not accept any. Had her back turned, was crying and paid no attention. He left a check and some money on the bureau. It lay there until next evening and some one put it in the cupboard. Was angry and vowed she would never touch the money, and that she had never touched the pen. Cashed the check about four weeks after because of her expenses. "I thought that my rights had gone, that I could do no different, and I might as well use it. When I used the check I thought that I could do no different, that my rights were gone, and it was no good to keep it." The money—five dollars and some cents—was first used. That it was months after that she learned that the action of her husband had not ended her rights. She went to see a lawyer about seven months afterwards. Upon cross-examination the following letter was shown her:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., November 17, 1898.

"PRESIDENT DUNLOP.

"DEAR SIR: On last Tuesday, November 15, as entering one of the cars, No. 217, of the Capital Traction road, at Tenth street and Pennsylvania avenue, about 4 p. m., with friends, I was thrown backwards, receiving severe injuries, from which I am still suffering. The cause of same was that the car was started before I was fully aboard. Having heard nothing from your company in regard to same, I will be pleased to do so.

"Yours respectfully,

"MRS. ROCKWELL,

"Per T. A. ROBERTSON.

"No. 1117 Twenty-second street northwest, Washington, D. C."

Said she had never seen the letter but had suggested it and knew that it had been written. Miss Robertson was a neighbor who had called in—she was her cousin. Did not intend the letter as an invitation to come to see her, but wanted the defendant to know whether they would send or not. Thought she had to let them know about it. Expected she wanted someone to come to see her, and suppose the agent came because of it. Thought she could not bring a suit without letting them know. Wanted to tell him of the accident. Did not want payment of money at the time. My cousin said I would better let them know. The following question was asked her: "Did you not know, when you got that check three weeks afterwards, that it was given you on the faith of that being your signature to that paper, whatever the effect of it was, and whether it was valid or not; that that check was given to you on the faith of that being your signature to that paper?" She answered: "I knew that he had said that he had a mark on there and that we had the money and there was no good doing anything after that." Did not remember that Mrs. Lucas asked permission to sign her name to the paper.

W. G. Rockwell, husband of plaintiff, testified that a man came to Walter's store where he was employed. Said he represented the railroad company, and had been to the house to see plaintiff, and wanted to do what was right for her. That she had left it all to witness and he had come to see him. Was busy and had some talk about the price. Asked him $100 or something and we got it down to $85. Signed the paper and he asked me to go to the house with him. When we got there it appeared that plaintiff knew nothing about it. She would not sign. Thought she had sent him to me to fix it up. "I said something about a 'nice way to send a man around to me and make a —— ass of me; I have signed the paper, now if you don't put your name on it you won't get anything,' and I went out." Left defendant's agent there. Mrs. Irene Lucas was called as a witness and corroborated the plaintiff's evidence relating to the first visit of defendant's agent. Regarding the second and third interviews, she said:

"I was over there doing work for my sister, and Mr. Dunlop came in, and he told her he had come to see what he could do for her, and Mrs. Rockwell said she didn't want him to do anything for her; that she didn't know how badly she was hurt. He says: 'Well,' he said, 'you know, Mrs. Rockwell, we have so many of these little cases that we want to get them off our hands as soon as possible;' and he says: 'Don't you think that $50 will be a fair price?' She says: 'Why, Mr. Dunlop, I don't care for anything,' she says, 'I don't want anything unless I am hurt badly, and if I am, why, of course, I will expect you to pay what is right.' And she says: 'As far as now is concerned, I am in no condition to talk to you.' And he stayed there for quite awhile, and kept on until she got real nervous, and Mrs. Ready advised him to go away and come back some other time; but he kept on raising the price until he got up as high as $85, I think. I am not positive whether it was that, or it might have been less; it was not more, and Mrs. Rockwell kept on refusing to take it, and I was getting dinner; and I went out of the room off and on, and I don't remember anything then, only that he went out and said he would come back.

"When he came back Mr. Rockwell came with him; and Mr. Rockwell came in behind Mr. Dunlop, I am sure, and kind of stood in the doorway, and Mr. Dunlop at the foot of the bed. And Mr. Dunlop says: 'Mrs. Rockwell,' he says, 'I have your husband's signature to this paper,' he says, 'Will you sign it?' She says, 'No, I will not;' and Mr. Rockwell became angry, and he said this what they have said before; I won't repeat that; and he ran down the steps and shut the door. And Mr. Dunlop, he stayed there, and he told her that he thought she had better sign it; that Mr. Rockwell had signed it, and she ought to, and she said: 'Oh,' she said, 'I don't care what you all do,' and she threw herself back in the bed and commenced to cry. And Mr. Dunlop stood there for a minute, and so he said, 'Aren't you going to sign, Mrs. Rockwell?' and she says: 'No,' she says, 'I am not going to sign;' and I went out of the room to attend to the dinner, and when I came back Mr. Dunlop said: 'Mrs. Lucas,' 'he says, 'I want your name as a witness; I want you to sign as a witness,' and I am not positive, but I think, he says, 'sign your sister's name, too,' and I signed the paper. Now, whether I signed her name or mine I don't remember, but I know that I signed my own name."

She further said that plaintiff was lying with her face to the wall crying. "She did not say one word to me at all, and I took it for granted that it was all right, and that the time I had been in the kitchen they had come to some agreement." He offered some money to Mrs. Ready who refused to take it. He offered it to witness, and then laid it on the bureau and went out. Mrs. Ready, in refusing to receive the money, said she did not think it was right; that she thought an undue advantage had been taken of the plaintiff, and she would not have anything to do with it. Plaintiff was in a great deal of pain and had taken something to quiet her nerves, which Dr. Moran had prescribed. She identified her signature as a witness and said that she wrote plaintiff's name. The agent handed witness the paper, and said he wanted her signature as a witness. Signed where he said. Told her to write plaintiff's name. Did not tell plaintiff; supposed that she knew. She did not see because her face was to the wall. Did not ask her about it. Did not see her touch the pen.

Mrs. M. J. Ready testified as follows:

"I was not present on both occasions when Mr. Dunlop called. I was not there the first time; I was the second. When Mr. Dunlop came in he just simply said he had come to make some agreement about the accident, and Mrs. Rockwell said that she did not feel like talking about it that day, you know, that she was in no condition to talk. He just simply said that he had come to make some agreement, don't you know, and do the best that he could, and asked her what amount she thought would be right to take, and she said she did not know. So he said—he asked her if she thought $50 would be right, and she said no, that she would not take fifty dollars; that if she was not badly hurt, she did not want any more than expenses; but if she was, why she thought that they ought to do what was right by her.

"Then he went on to say sixty, I think, or he went as far as, I think, eighty dollars. Then she just simply turned over and said that she did not care to talk about it and I told him that I thought he should leave and call another day, as I did not think she was in any condition to talk on the subject, and as she was not in any immediate want, that it was not necessary to have a settlement. And he said that he had so many of these cases that he would prefer settling it right then and there, so as to clear it right up.

"So, anyway, he talked just on that subject, for a while, and finally he said that he would go away and that he would call again. So in a few moments he returned with Mr. Rockwell, and he asked Mrs. Rockwell to sign a paper, and she said no, she would not; and Mr. Rockwell then uttered an oath, you know, and said that she had sent that man around there, and if the paper went away with his signature on it, without hers, she would not get anything.

"So Mr. Dunlop walked to the bed and asked her if she would sign, and as he did I turned towards the window, and I did not see whether she did or not. I never noticed any further than that. Then, in a little while, Mrs. Lucas came into the room, and I heard Mr. Dunlop ask her if he might have her signature to her sister's cross, or something—at first he came to me and asked if he might have mine. I told him that I did not care to have anything to do with the case at all, and then, when Mrs. Lucas came in the room, why she gave her signature, as Mr. Dunlop asked her to. Then he wrote a check, I think, at least he came over to me and offered me the check, and I told him, as I had told him before, that I did not care to have anything to do with it, and so he laid the check on the dresser, and he went out.

"I do not remember anything at all being said by Mrs. Rockwell to Mr. Dunlop or by Mr. Dunlop to Mrs. Rockwell about Mr. Dunlop's going to see her husband. Mrs. Rockwell seemed to be suffering a great deal, and she was just tossing from one side of the bed to the other, and did not seem to be in any condition to be annoyed, as I had told Mr. Dunlop at the time. He said he had so many of these cases to settle that he would like to have this cleared up as soon as possible. As nearly as I can recollect, Mr. Dunlop was there about half an hour, probably a little more. I don't know."

As the motion to withdraw the case from the jury was founded on the insufficiency of the plaintiff's evidence relating to the execution of the release, it is unnecessary to set out the evidence on behalf of the defendant on this point. It is sufficient to say that it consisted of the testimony of the agent who effected the settlement and received the release; and that it contradicted the evidence offered by the plaintiff tending to show undue advantage taken of her condition.

He said that he paid his first visit because of plaintiff's letter and heard her statement as to the manner in which she had been hurt, the time, place, and number of the car. That he said the defendant wanted to do what was right, etc. That upon the second visit he found plaintiff in good condition to talk and agreed with her on $75. That she referred him to her husband and gave his place of business. That he called to see the husband who wanted more, but finally agreed with him on $85. That he then interlined and filled in the blanks of the printed form with pen and ink furnished by the husband, who then signed the same. That he asked the husband to go with him to see his wife execute the release; wanted him to explain to her the change from $75 to $85, and to know that everything was properly done. That when they returned, plaintiff demurred and said she ought to have more money. That he reminded her of her agreement, and she said she did not know how long she might be laid up, and ought to have more. Her husband was in a hurry and impatient and said, without using an oath: "Why I thought you had agreed on this amount. I haven't got time to fool around here. I have got to go back. I can't stay around here. I have signed this paper and agreed on this, and you will either take that or nothing. I haven't got time to fool." He then went out; that he asked plaintiff what she would do. She made no reply; that he said: "We will have to do one thing or the other. We will have to do something now. I can not stay any longer." She said: "Well, I guess I will have to take it." That he then said if agreeable she could sign the paper, and he asked for pen and ink. She asked Mrs. Lucas to get them, and the latter went into another room and brought them. Nothing was said during this interval. The release was read to her slowly and accurately. She raised up to sign, but could not use her hand and said: "Let my sister sign it for me." Mrs. Lucas wrote plaintiff's name, witness wrote the words her mark, and plaintiff touched the pen and made the mark. Mrs. Lucas signed as a witness. Mrs. Ready was not in the room at the time. That he took the release, laid $5.75 in cash on the bureau, which she said do, and a check for $79 25. The check was payable to the agent's order and indorsed by him. It showed that it had been paid December 3, 1898.

Defendant introduced a witness whose evidence tended to show declarations made by the plaintiff afterwards that she had compromised for $85, but that she now wanted more money, etc. This witness and another undertook to impeach plaintiff's reputation for veracity. Plaintiff introduced evidence in rebuttal tending to show enmity on the part of defendant's impeaching witnesses, and to contradict their statements; also to show that her reputation for truth was good. At the conclusion of the evidence, as shown by the bill of exceptions, the defendant "moved the court, on all the evidence as above set forth and given for the plaintiff, to instruct the jury to return a verdict for defendant." The motion was sustained, and from the judgment rendered on the verdict so returned the plaintiff appealed.

1. A preliminary question arises on the objection of the defendant to the consideration of the error assigned on the action of the court in directing the verdict, on the ground that the bill of exceptions does not purport to set out all of the evidence. It is well established that in order to warrant an appellate court in determining whether there was error in giving or refusing an instruction to return a verdict the bill of exceptions must show that all of the evidence has been set forth. U. S. v. Copper Queen Mining Co., 185 U. S. 495, 497. In our opinion the bill of exceptions in this case substantially complies with that requirement. It purports to recite the evidence in the order of its introduction, giving the name of each witness. This evidence is given at length in each instance, and frequently recites both the questions and answers—a practice which, in this last respect, has been disapproved. D. C. v. Frazer, 21 App. D. C. 154, 159: 31 Wash. Law Rep. 83. As shown in the statement of the case, the recital of the action of the court in directing the verdict is that it was founded "on all of the evidence as above set forth on behalf of the plaintiff." There is a later recital in the bill of exceptions as follows: "Be it further remembered that each of the several and separate exceptions taken by the counsel for the plaintiff, to the rulings of the court during the progress of the trial, and the exceptions by the counsel for the plaintiff to the instructions of the court to the jury upon the whole evidence, the subject of which whole evidence is included in the bill of exceptions." . . .

Moreover, the bill of exceptions presented by the plaintiff was objected to by the defendant, and the one signed was presented by the latter, as shown in the following note given by the trial justice and made a part of the same:

"Note.—Counsel for plaintiff submitted a briefer bill of exceptions, but counsel for defendant objected to said bill of exceptions as not setting forth the whole record and submitted another bill of exceptions, which said other bill of exceptions plaintiff admitted was an accurate record of the proceedings, but protested that the same was set forth at unnecessary length and was objectionable under the rules of the Court of Appeals as embodying to too great an extent a literal transcript of the proceedings at the trial, whereupon, in view of the admission of counsel for plaintiff of the accuracy of this bill of exception, and deeming it proper the record should be set forth with fullness, I settled and signed the above bill of exceptions."

We do not regard this note as making the bill of exceptions that of the defendant, thereby precluding it from objecting to its sufficiency, and it has been recited merely as tending to strengthen the conclusion that none of the evidence material to the determination of the error assigned has been omitted.

The second recital of the bill of exceptions, before quoted, was an unnecessary one, but whether so or not, in view of the fact recited in the note aforesaid, and the first recital that the instruction was given "on all the evidence as above set forth and given," it can not be regarded as controlling the first one.

2. Several questions are involved in the determination of the error assigned on the action of the court in directing the return of the verdict for the defendant, and these will be considered in their order.

(1.) Is the release of the cause of action to be regarded as executed by the plaintiff under seal? It will be remembered that the plaintiff's husband first signed the instrument and that a seal is affixed to his signature; that none follows the signature of the plaintiff. Were this all it might well be considered a sealed instrument in so far as the husband is concerned, without being one as regards the wife. But the instrument contains the recital, "given under our hands and seals," from which the presumption may be indulged that the seal affixed to his signature was adopted by her also. Northumberland v. Cobleigh, 59 N. H. 250, 252; Burnett v. McCluey, 78 Mo. 676, 688; 25 A. & E. Encyc. L. 79. See also, Brown v. Commercial Fire Ins. Co., 21 App. D. C. 325, 336.

(2.) Can the plaintiff defeat the operation of the sealed release pleaded in bar of her action at law by showing fraud in its procurement? We are of the opinion that she can. At a time, even, when the observance of the technical distinctions between sealed and unsealed instruments was more rigidly adhered to than now, it was permissible to avoid the obligation of a sealed instrument by showing that fraud or imposition had been practiced in procuring the signature and seal. "The fraud in this aspect goes to the question whether or not the instrument ever had any legal existence." Hartshorn v. Day, 19 How. 211, 223.

While it may be that the present case does not fall entirely within the exception stated in Hartshorn v. Day, supra, because there was no actual misrepresentation of the character and purport of the instrument executed, we see no reason whatever for the maintenance of the distinction in the case of instruments of the kind under consideration.

The operation of the release was as completely effective at law without as with execution under seal, and the affixture of the seal was a superfluous act. The decided tendency of modern decisions is to minimize the old distinctions between sealed and unsealed instruments, where they have not been entirely abrogated by legislation. Lyons v. Allen, 11 App. D. C. 543, 549. In that case it was said by Chief Justice Alvey: "Formerly this right of avoiding a release under seal, on the ground of fraud, in an action at law, was generally denied, and the party was referred to a court of equity in jurisdictions where the remedies at common law and equity are separate; but it is now held by a great preponderance of authority that a release so set up as a defense may be avoided at law."

(3.) Was it necessary to entitle the plaintiff to avoid the release on the ground of fraud, that she should have offered to return the consideration received, before bringing her action for the injury? We have heretofore held that a return or an offer to return must be made in order to avoid such a release. Lyons v. Allen, 11 App. D. C. 543, 549, 552. But in that case no offer to return was made either before or after the beginning of the action, and the amount received on the execution of the release was permitted to be set off in the verdict.

In another case it was held that the tender of the return of the consideration, made during the trial of the case, was sufficient. C. & O. R. R. Co. v. Howard, 14 App. D. C. 262, 297; s. c. 178; U. S. 153, 167. In that case, as in this, the release was obtained from a woman suffering great pain from a recent injury, and the plaintiff's evidence tended to show that she did not understand the instrument to be a release of her cause of action, but a mere receipt for money given to help her. It is sought to distinguish that case from this, because here there was no misrepresentation of the nature of the instrument, and the alleged fraud consists solely in the manner in which its execution was obtained. As intimated in that case, though not considered necessary to its determination, we are not satisfied with the soundness of any such distinction as affecting the time of the offer to return the consideration.

If, in case of a contract procured in either way, the signer should bring an action of deceit or a suit to cancel, she would be compelled to return, or offer to return, whatever she had received as the condition of its maintenance. In the one case the signer might not reasonably be expected to tender the return of money and bring a suit to rescind, because of the belief that she had received the money as a gift and had executed nothing more than a receipt for the same, at least, until informed that the instrument was in fact a release and held as such. If informed of this fact, in advance, what would be the substantial difference between her situation and that of the plaintiff in this case? Each instrument is operative to the same extent if untainted by fraud, and equally inoperative if so tainted. If procured through fraud, neither party is required to sue for cancellation, but may impeach its validity when offered in defense to an action at law. And we see no good reason why one party more than the other should be required to anticipate a defense founded on the instrument, and offer to return the consideration as the condition of bringing the action. We are of the opinion that it is time enough to make the tender in either case after the release shall have been pleaded in bar. Tender or offer to return then accomplishes all the purposes for which it is required at all.

Some of the cases to which our attention has been called, where the doctrine has been declared that tender or offer to return is a condition precedent to the institution of the suit, were either suits to rescind, or suits in courts of blended jurisdiction where cancellation was part of the remedy sought. Lumley v. Wabash R. Co., 71 Fed. Rep. 21; Strodder v. South Granite Co., 94 Ga. 626; Herman v. Hoffernager, 54 Cal. 161. In others no tender had been made at any stage of the proceedings. Norwich Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Guiton, 124 Ind. 217; Potter v. Monmouth Ins. Co., 63 Me. 440; Pangborn v. Cont. Ins. Co., 67 Mich. 683; E. T. V. & G. Ry. Co. v. Hayes, 83 Ga. 558; Drohan v. L. S. & M. S. Ry. Co., 162 Mass. 435; Brown v. Hartford Ins. Co. 117 Mass. 479; L. & N. R. Co. v. McElroy, 100 Ky. 153, 159; Hill v. N. Pac. R. Co., 113 Fed. Rep. 914, 916; Och. v. M. K. & T. Ry. Co., 130 Mo. 27. In the case last cited there was a replication of fraud in the release pleaded by defendant, but no offer to return the consideration. The majority of the court expressed the opinion that in the action at law unless the execution of the release was obtained by fraud a tender should have been made. It was further said, however, that the "petition might have been amended, before or at the trial, upon proper terms by adding a count in equity to set aside the settlement." Gould v. Cayuga Co. Bank, 86 N. Y. 75, was a case very unlike the present one, and the tender therein made during the trial was a qualified and conditional one. Substantially it was nothing more than an offer of credit upon the recovery sought.

On the other hand, many cases, some of which are cited, expressly decide that the offer to return may be made after the institution of the suit and while it is depending. O'Brien v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 89 Iowa, 644; C. R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Lewis, 109 Ill. 120; C. R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Doyle, 18 Kan. 58; see, also, U. P. R. Co. v. Harris, 158 U. S. 326, 331, 333. In that case the release pleaded by the defendant was attacked for fraud in its execution. A meager statement of the evidence tends to show that there was a claim of misrepresentation of the contents of the instrument, and also that the plaintiff was not in a condition to fully understand what he was doing. The defendant moved the court to instruct the jury that the release was a complete bar to the action. This was denied and the question of fraud was submitted to the jury. No tender of return of the consideration was made at any time, but the jury were permitted to deduct it from the amount allowed plaintiff for his damages. The question of tender was not expressly, but impliedly, passed on in approving the charge to the jury.

(4) It is unnecessary to review the evidence offered by the plaintiff in support of the charge of fraud in obtaining her signature to the release, all of which appears in the statement of the case heretofore made. In our opinion it was sufficient to require the submission of the issue to the jury. Whether the witnesses were credible, and whether their evidence had been overcome by the contradictory evidence of the defendant, were questions for the exclusive determination of the jury.

The evidence, regarded in the aspect most favorable to the plaintiff, tended to show that at the time of touching the pen she was in bed suffering considerable pain, and that she was weak, nervous, and weeping under the strain. If, however, the validity of the release turned solely upon her incapacity to understand what it was represented to be, namely, a release of her right of action, this evidence, standing alone, would not be sufficient; but it was entitled to weight in determining whether she signed the release under the false impression that its execution by her husband made it operative to destroy any right of action she may have had. If in her weakened and nervous condition she was induced to sign under that belief, produced by the declaration of her husband in the presence of defendant's agent, who neither contradicted nor explained it, her action can not be governed by the general rule that applies in the case of a mistake of law, and it is unnecessary to consider the distinction between ignorance of a general rule of law and ignorance of law relating to a mere private right of property. A misrepresentation of the law, especially under such circumstances, does not differ in effect from the misrepresentation of a material fact.

(5) The fact that plaintiff used the money and cashed the check shortly after their receipt did not show a ratification of the release as matter of law. If when this was done plaintiff remained under the same impression that she had when she signed, or authorized her signature to be attached to, the release, then there was no ratification. "One can not waive or acquiesce in a wrong while ignorant that it has been committed." Pence v. Langdon, 99 U. S. 578, 581.

3. One other question remains to be considered, as it may arise on the new trial if not now determined. A champertous contract that may have been made by plaintiff with some third person for the maintenance of the action is no bar to her recovery. Burnes v. Scott, 117 U. S. 582, 589. Evidence, therefore, tending to show that the plaintiff had not furnished the deposit for costs, or the money tendered to defendant to repay that received at the time of the execution of the release, was irrelevant, and ought not to have been admitted over her objection.

For the errors pointed out the judgment must be reversed, with costs, and the cause remanded with direction to vacate the verdict and grant a new trial. It is so ordered. Reversed.

Bankruptcy — Composition — Ratification.— Under Bankr. Act. it is competent for a trustee in bankruptcy to maintain an action in a State court against a chattel mortgagee to recover the value of property taken by defendant under his mortgage from the possession of the bankrupt after the adjudication, and the judgment therein on the merits is binding on him as to the issues involved. A composition offered by a bankrupt held not such as would be enforced as against a dissenting creditor. In re Woodend, U. S. D. C., S. D. N. Y., 133 Fed. Rep. 593.

Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

JAMES N. SPARKS, APPELLANT,

v.

FANNIE P. SPARKS.

ALIMONY, PENDENTE LITE; COSTS OF DEFENDING APPEAL.

An order of the court below granting to the plaintiff in a suit for maintenance alimony pendente lite and counsel fees, and also an order requiring the defendant to pay the plaintiff a sum to enable her to defend an appeal taken by him from the former order, affirmed.

No. 1508. Decided April 4, 1905.

APPEAL by defendant from orders of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in Equity, No. 24,904, allowing alimony pendente lite and expenses of suit in proceeding for maintenance. Affirmed.

Mr. E. H. Thomas and Mr. John Ridout for the appellant.

Mr. A. E. L. Leckie, Mr. Creed M. Fulton, and Mr. Joseph W. Cox for the appellee.

Mr. Justice DUELL delivered the opinion of the Court:

Two appeals are before us at this time. The one is from an interlocutory order granting to the plaintiff-appellee alimony pendente lite and also counsel fees. The other is from a like order requiring the defendant-appellant to pay to appellee a certain sum to enable her to defend an appeal taken from the former order.

The suit is brought by the wife against the husband to compel him to contribute to her support and maintenance, the petition alleging desertion and a refusal to provide for her. To the petition the defendant filed a plea setting up the dismissal of a former suit brought for a divorce by the petitioner as a bar to the present proceeding. Copies of the bill of complaint and the decree in the former suit are attached to the plea herein and made exhibits.

The order for alimony and counsel fees was made after hearing counsel for the respective parties and upon the pleadings and additional affidavits.

Had the plea been set down for argument or testimony taken in support thereof, and the case brought before us as an appeal from a final decree, counsel could have not been more diligent in the investigation of the questions of law raised by the plea, and in the citation of law applicable thereto, nor could they have been more eloquent, witty, and pathetic in the presentation of the alleged facts set forth in the pleadings and the somewhat lurid exhibits and affidavits. Were it allowable for us to express an opinion on the subject, we could truly say that the clients at least got the worth of their money, whatever might be said of the mutual friends. But the case comes before us upon simple interlocutory questions, involving no great constitutional principles, nor requiring us to very closely examine the decisions of the courts of last resort in all the States of the Union. The court was interested, instructed, and charmed, yet withal grieved, at the pictures painted of domestic infelicity, the heartlessness of man, and the forgiving spirit shown by woman. We must, however, keep in the beaten paths and resist the temptation to pass upon the allegations of "cold acts of indifference," the position to be assigned to "the perfect gentleman about the family," or to locate the roof under which the forgiving ones were to be sheltered. The merits of the case are not now to be passed upon, much less the questions raised by the plea, which is only before us as one of the pleadings read upon the motion, and as a pleading.

We have intimated that the counsel fee is reasonable and have set forth some of the salient features of the case in justification of our opinion. We also find that alimony at the rate of $25 a month is a reasonable amount to be paid by the defendant, who is in receipt of a salary from a solvent employer of $1,400 per year. The rule is well settled that a court is not guilty of a gross abuse of discretion in awarding alimony and counsel fee to a wife, without passing upon the merits of the case, where she is without separate means and the husband is able to support her. Facts sufficient to justify the court below in awarding alimony and counsel fees were not seriously controverted. The marriage was not denied; the wife was as stated "without any visible or other means of support;" the husband was in receipt of a fair salary; and the parties were admittedly living apart. The court, on the hearing of such a motion, was not required to pass upon the question whether the plea was well founded in law. That was a question to be passed upon in another way. The order granting alimony at the rate of $25 a month and counsel fee of $50 was in all respects proper. It appears that after the appeal was taken and citation issued, and upon the same day the appeal bond was filed, the second order granting plaintiff the sum of $75 as counsel fees and expenses of defending the appeal was passed.

We are of opinion that the court below at the time of granting the order had jurisdiction over the case, and that it was still pending there, and was not at that time in this court. If the appellant desired the luxury of an appeal, and preferred to take it rather than speed the hearing of the case on the merits, he should not feel aggrieved if the court allowed the wife the protection of counsel. While litigation is a luxury, and ordinarily a husband need not furnish luxuries, which may, perhaps, be beyond the ideas of a prudent man, yet this must be held to be one of the exceptions to the rule.

No error was committed by the court below and the orders appealed from are affirmed, with costs.

In Grueber Engineering Company v. Waldren, decided in March, 1905, by the Supreme Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey (60 Atl. 386), the following is from the official syllabus: "Where the final letter in a correspondence leading up to the contract shows that it was intended to embrace the whole agreement, and to finally conclude it, it is the only evidence of the contract; and oral testimony of what was said or done during the negotiations, or other letters written pending the negotiations, will not be permitted either to contradict the written contract or to supply terms with respect to which the writing is silent."

Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, PLAINTIFF IN ERROR,
v.
BUSHROD T. GARRISON.

No. 1535. Decided May 23, 1905.

IN ERROR to the Police Court of the District of Columbia. Affirmed.

Mr. A. B. Duvall and Mr. F. H. Stephens for the plaintiff in error.

Mr. Charles F. Diggs for the defendant in error.

Mr. Justice MORRIS delivered the opinion of the Court:

The appellee was arraigned in the Police Court of the District for refusing to furnish to an inspector of the health department a sample of milk, in which article he was a dealer, sufficient for the purpose of analysis, in alleged violation of the act of Congress of February 17, 1898, 30 Stat. 246, enacted for the prevention of adulteration of drugs or articles of food. The section of the act, which is the portion charged to have been violated, is in the following words:

"Sec. 6. That every person offering for sale or delivering to any purchaser any drug or article of food included in the provisions of this act shall furnish to an analyst or other officer or agent of the health department, who shall apply to him for the purpose and shall render him the value of the same, a sample sufficient for the purpose of analysis of any such drug or article of food which is in his possession."

The facts of the case are sufficiently shown by the bill of exceptions taken at the trial in the Police Court, which, as it is most commendably short, may here be transcribed in full. It is as follows:

"Be it remembered that, at the trial of this cause, the District of Columbia to maintain the issue on its part joined, called as a witness one R. A. Guerrant, an inspector of the health department of the District of Columbia, who, after being duly sworn, testified in substance as follows:

"That on the 23d day of February, A. D. 1905, he called at the defendant's store, and stated to him that he, the said Guerrant, was an inspector of the health department of the District of Columbia, and demanded of the said defendant a half pint of milk for the purpose of making an analysis of the said milk, the said defendant being then and there a dealer in milk, and then and there tendered to said defendant the value in money of the half pint of milk, and that thereupon the defendant refused to sell him a half pint of milk, informing him that he did not sell milk in any quantity less than one pint, and then and there he placed a pint bottle of milk on the counter and offered to sell it to him; that he did not see any bottled in vessels containing less than one pint, and that all the bottles containing milk were sealed by a pulp paper cap.

"Thereupon the District of Columbia closed its case, and the defendant, to maintain the issue on his part joined, testified on his own behalf, after having been duly sworn, substantially as follows:

"That he was, on said 23d day of February, A. D. 1905, engaged in the grocery business in the District of Columbia, and that he sold milk, but that for over a year he had not sold it except in the original bottle as received from the dairy, and that they consisted of pints and quarts, and were sealed by a pulp paper cap; that for the past year he had never sold less than a full bottle, and that if he had been forced to sell the inspector a half bottle he would have lost the other half, as he did not use milk personally and would not have offered it for sale, as his customers understood he did not sell milk in quantities less than one pint.

"This was all the evidence in the case, and thereupon counsel for the defendant moved the court to find defendant not guilty and rule as a matter of law that the act of Congress, for a violation of which the defendant was charged in the information is unconstitutional and void, because it is an attempt to deprive the citizen of his property without due process of law, and that Congress did not mean that said act should be so understood.

"And the court so ruled and found the defendant not guilty, to which said ruling and judgment counsel for the District of Columbia then and there duly excepted, etc., etc., etc."

Thereupon the District of Columbia sought and was allowed a writ of error to remove the cause to this court, and the cause is now here upon such writ.

The fact does not appear in the record, but it does appear in the briefs and oral arguments of counsel in the cause, and it is conceded that the value of a pint of milk is 4 cents, and the value of a half pint is 2 cents. The amount tendered by the inspector in this case was 2 cents for the sample of a half pint which he desired, and the appellee tendered him a pint for 4 cents. So it appears that this whole controversy is over the sum of 2 cents; and the time of this court has been wasted, and the money of the United States and the people of the District of Columbia to the extent, at least, of five hundred times the amount involved has been needlessly expended over a matter which the slightest amount of common sense should have dictated as improper to be made a subject of litigation. Nor is there any question whatever of principle involved in the case. If there were, the ridiculously small amount of money involved might be overlooked. But there is no such question. And we must say that, if this court had fully understood the scope of appellant's application for a writ of error, the writ would not have been allowed.

It is true that it is said that this is a test case, and that the question of the constitutionality of the statute has been suggested. But there is no good ground for making any test case here; and only in the frivolous and absurd procedure of the District officials is there any basis for the theory of unconstitutionality of the section of the statute here in question. The statute is sensible and proper enough; and it is an enactment sanctioned by the experience of many, perhaps most of the States of the Union, and fully justified by the police power vested in the State to provide for the public welfare. Nor was it contested by the appellee that the State is entitled to demand reasonable samples of drugs and articles of food for the purpose of analysis upon payment of their value. On the contrary, he tendered to the inspector a reasonable sample, and it was refused. The difference in bulk and value between a pint and a half pint of milk, required for the purpose of analysis, is too insignificant as a matter upon which to base a penal prosecution. A reasonable sample is what is required by the act of Congress. Under the circumstances of this case, a pint was a reasonable sample, and a half pint was not such a reasonable sample. The appellee was fully within his right and fully performed his duty in tendering the former; the inspector was wholly at fault in demanding the latter and insisting upon it against the will of the appellee.

What may or may not be a reasonable sample is a question for which perhaps no positive rule can be laid down applicable to all cases. This is not for the determination exclusively either of the inspector or the dealer. The act requires that it shall be "sufficient for the purpose of analysis," but it is not competent for the inspector to require, because he thinks a half pint of milk sufficient to enable him to make a satisfactory analysis of such milk that therefore the dealer must sell him such half pint, when thereby the value of another half pint would be destroyed or lost to the dealer, and the dealer is willing to sell an entire pint at an additional cost of merely 2 cents to the inspector.

The Police Court was entirely right in the judgment which it rendered in this case, and it would have been error to render any different judgment. Its decision must be affirmed. And it is so ordered.

Corporation; Agency; Usage; Evidence.

The Supreme Court of Indiana held, in the recent case of Berlin v. P. L. Cusachs, Limited, that the authority of the subordinate agents of a corporation often depends upon the course of dealing which the company or its directors have sanctioned, and may be established sometimes without reference to the official record of the proceedings of the board, by proof of the usages which the company has permitted to grow up in the business, and of the acquiescence of the board charged with the duty of supervising and controlling the company's business, and that parties dealing with the president of a corporation in the usual manner and within the scope of the powers which the president has been accustomed, without the assent of the directors and ultra vires of the corporation, to exercise would be entitled to assume that he had been invested with those powers. The court further held that to warrant the discharge of the manager of a corporation, whose services had been employed for a fixed time and at a fixed price, before the expiration of the time agreed upon, there should exist grounds of complaint against him of a "serious" character, and that should a discharge be made without the existence of such serious grounds the corporation would render itself liable to the discharged employee as provided in article 2749 of the Civil Code of the State.

Lease—Rental—Remodeling Building.

The Kentucky Court of Appeals held, in the recent case of Jones et al. v. J. W. Fowler Drug Company, that where premises were leased for a drug store for five years under a contract providing that in the event the owner should desire to remodel the building so far as it would necessitate the tenant removing from the building he was to receive a certain reduction of the rent, with the right to occupy the premises after the building was remodeled at the same rental until the expiration of the lease, such tenant was entitled to hold the premises, where they had been damaged by fire without his fault, when the damage was not such as to render them untenable, and that such lessee might elect to retain them unless the lessor agreed that he should reoccupy them after they were remodeled, as specified in the written contract.

Trainmen on the Puget Sound Shore Railroad, which was operated between Seattle and Tacoma during the '80s, were required to make report of all animals killed or injured on the right of way. In the blank furnished upon which to make such report was the question, "Where was the animal when you first saw it?"

COURT OF APPEALS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA:

Master and Servant—Danger From Separate Work of Fellow Servant.

In Western Electric Co. v. Hauselmann, decided March, 1905, by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit (136 Fed. 564), it is held that where a servant is set to work in a place safe in itself, but in which he is exposed to danger from the doing by other servants of work not connected with his own, the master is bound to employ the necessary means to give him timely warning of such danger, and can not delegate such duty to any other person so as to relieve himself from liability for the negligent failure to give such warning. In that case it appeared that plaintiff was sent to work where he was obliged to stand partly inside the doorway of elevator shafts, and was struck and injured by one of the cars, which were continued in use by other servants. The latter had been directed by the master to give plaintiff warning of the approach of the cars, but this was not done. It was held that the facts justified a finding by the jury that the master did not perform his duty in respect to furnishing plaintiff with a safe place to work, in that it neither stopped the cars nor provided some one who should devote his attention to keeping watch so as to give the plaintiff due warning.

Unfair Competition—Use of Family Name.

In Howe Scale Company et al. v. Wyckoff, Seamans & Benedict, decided April 24, 1905, by the Supreme Court of the United States, and reported in the Advance Sheets for June 1, it is held that unfair competition does not arise out of the use in a corporate name of the surnames of one or more of the incorporators, where such use by the individuals themselves or in a partnership would not be open to that charge. A manufacturer of typewriters under the names "Remington" and "Remington Standard" is held not entitled to protection against the adoption by persons bearing respectively the names "Remington" and "Sholes" of the name "Remington-Sholes" for their typewriters, and the giving of that name to the corporation formed for their manufacture and sale, where the only confusion in the minds of the public as to the origin of the products results from the simularity in names, and not from the manner of their use.

Fraudulent Procurement of Note.

Two points of considerable interest are decided in the case of Yakima Valley Bank v. McAllister, 79 Pac. Rep. 119. Persons claiming to be life insurance agents solicited defendant to take out a policy in the company they claimed to represent, offering to forward his application, obtain a policy, and allow him six weeks in which to examine it, when he could retain it and pay the premium if he was satisfied with it. It was represented that, as evidence of good faith, the defendant must execute a note payable to himself, on which he would not be liable until he indorsed it, and also file a waiver, releasing the company from liability in case he died before deciding to accept the policy. The note was executed, and in signing the release the papers were so placed that the ink in some manner penetrated the paper, so that the defendant's signature appeared as an indorsement on the note. Under these circumstances it was held that the fact that the defendant performed the physical act of indorsing the note did not render him liable thereon, even to a bona fide purchaser. It was further held that evidence of the procurement of similar notes and indorsements, by the same persons, under practically identical circumstances, was admissible for the purpose of showing a systematic plan to defraud.

Principal and Surety—Contribution.—The fact that one surety pays the entire obligation does not relieve the cosurety from liability for contribution. Wash. v. D. Sullivan & Co., Tex., 84 S. W. Rep. 368.

Railroads—Injury to Child on Track.—A child walking along a railroad track held a trespasser, to whom only as such the railroad company owed a duty. Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Harris, Ala., 37 So. Rep. 794.

Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

FREDERICK I. ALLEN, COMMISSIONER OF PATENTS, APPELLANT,

v.

UNITED STATES, EX REL. GEORGE A. LOWRY, ET AL.

PATENT OFFICE PRACTICE; APPEALS FROM INTERLOCUTORY DECISIONS IN INTERFERENCES; MANDAMUS.

1. A motion by one of the parties to an interference to dissolve the interference before the final hearing of the question of priority of invention, and before the case is ready for such hearing, is an interlocutory proceeding, and is not appealable unless made so by statute or rule of court.
2. Neither section 482, 4904, or 4909, R. S., nor any other statute, nor any rule of the Patent Office made by the Commissioner of Patents, gives the right of appeal to the examiners-in-chief from decisions made by the primary examiners, on the hearing of a motion to dissolve an interference, holding that a party has a right to make the claim which is the issue of the interference.
3. Where the statute gives the right of appeal in interference proceedings from the decisions of any officer of original jurisdiction, it refers to final decisions. The right to such an appeal should be clear, and if there is any doubt as to the construction of the statutes claimed to confer the right, such doubt should be resolved in favor of the long established and acquiesced in practice of the Patent Office.
4. Whatever right a party to an interference has to contest the right of his adversary to make the interfering claim, such right, if denied, is reviewable, if at all, upon the final decision of the question of priority.
5. An order of the court below awarding a writ of mandamus to compel the Commissioner of Patents to direct the examiners-in-chief to take jurisdiction of an appeal from a decision of the primary examiner refusing to dissolve an interference, and to decide the same upon the merits, reversed, on the ground that the relator had not shown himself entitled to an appeal.

No. 1521. Decided May 24, 1905.

APPEAL by respondent from an order of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at Law, No. 47,053, directing the issue of a writ of mandamus. Reversed.

Mr. John M. Coit for the appellant.

Mr. Oliver Mitchell, Mr. Edmund Wetmore, and Mr. A. V. Cushman for the appellee.

Mr. Justice DUELL delivered the opinion of the Court:

This appeal is taken from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, granting the petition of the relators that a mandamus issue commanding the Commissioner of Patents to direct the examiners-in-chief of the Patent Office to reinstate and take jurisdiction of an appeal taken by Lowry from the ruling of the primary examiner denying his motion to dissolve an interference declared by the Patent Office between his unexpired patent and a pending application for patent filed by one William L. Spoon.

The interference was declared under section 4904 of the Revised Statutes.

The record discloses that the interference was declared and notice thereof duly given to the parties as required by law.

In accordance with Patent Office Rule 122, which is one of the rules promulgated by the Commissioner of Patents under the authority conferred upon him by section 483 of the Revised Statutes, Lowry moved to dissolve the interference upon the various grounds specified in the rule and that motion was transmitted by the examiner of interferences to the proper principal examiner for a hearing. The reason urged at the hearing by Lowry for the dissolution was that Spoon had no right to make the claims in controversy because his application was for an inoperative device.

The petition sets forth and the answer admits that various proceedings were had in the interference after Lowry's motion to dissolve was transmitted to the principal examiner and before his final refusal to dissolve the interference, which denial led to Lowry's appeal to the examiners-in-chief, which was by them dismissed and which is required to be reinstated and heard by the mandamus granted by the court below.

It is unnecessary to refer to these various proceedings, for no allegation is made that any of them were irregular or that they were contrary to the statutes and rules governing the conduct of interference proceedings, and, therefore, they have no legitimate bearing upon the question raised by the petition for the mandamus.

The facts which raise the question as to the relator's right to the mandamus may be briefly summarized. Lowry having been made a party to an interference, as provided by section 4904, made a motion for its dissolution in accordance with Patent Office Rule 122, which motion being denied by the principal examiner, who ruled that Spoon had the right to make the claims, Lowry filed an appeal to the examiners-in-chief, although Patent Office Rule 124 expressly provided that no appeal could be taken from a ruling by the examiner that a party to an interference had the right to make the interfering claims. Upon motion duly made Lowry's appeal was dismissed by the examiners-in-chief, and, the Commissioner of Patents having denied Lowry's petition for an order directing the examiners-in-chief to reinstate and determine the appeal, he applied to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia for a writ of mandamus, which was granted.

The question which it becomes necessary for us to decide is simply whether the court below erred in issuing the mandamus commanding the Commissioner to direct the examiners-in chief to reinstate and determine the appeal. It is contended on behalf of the relators that the rule is contrary to law because it deprives a party to an interference of the right to an appeal given him by the statute. If this contention be correct, then the court below rightly granted the mandamus. If not, its grant was an error and must be reversed. The paragraph of Rule 124 in question provides that from a decision of the primary examiner, affirming the patentability of the claim or the applicant's right to make the same, no appeal can be taken. No question has or can be raised that the Commissioner of Patents has the right to regulate the conduct of proceedings in the Patent Office, including thereunder interference proceedings, by lawful rules, provided they are approved by the Secretary of the Interior, as the rule in question has been. Sec. 483, U. S. Revised Statutes.

It was incumbent upon Lowry, in order to entitle him to a writ of mandamus, to show that he had a clear right to appeal under the statutes relating to appeals in interference cases. Ex parte Cutting, 94 U. S. 14.

The sections of the statute and the rules of the Patent Office, which are to be considered in disposing of this appeal, are sections 482, 483, 4904, and 4909, and Rules 122 and 124. These read as follows:

"Sec. 482. The examiners-in-chief shall be persons of competent legal knowledge and scientific ability, whose duty it shall be, on the written petition of the appellant, to revise and determine upon the validity of the adverse decisions of examiners upon applications for patents, and for reissues of patents, and in interference cases; and, when required by the Commissioner, they shall hear and report upon claims for extensions, and perform such other like duties as he may assign them.

"Sec. 483. The Commissioner of Patents, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may from time to time establish regulations, not inconsistent with law, for the conduct of proceedings in the Patent Office.

"Sec. 4904. Whenever an application is made for a patent which, in the opinion of the Commissioner, would interfere with any pending application, or with any unexpired patent, he shall give notice thereof to the applicants, or applicant and patentee, as the case may be, and shall direct the primary examiner to proceed to determine the question of priority of invention. And the Commissioner may issue a patent to the party who is adjudged to the prior inventor, unless the adverse party appeals from the decision of the primary examiner, or of the board of examiners-in-chief, as the case may be, within such time, not less than 20 days, as the Commissioner shall prescribe.

"Sec. 4909. Every applicant for a patent or for the reissue of a patent, any of the claims of which have been twice rejected, and every party to an interference, may appeal from the decision of the primary examiner, or of the examiner in charge of interferences in such case, to the board of examiners-in-chief; having once paid the fee for such appeal.

"122. Motions to dissolve an interference upon the ground that no interference in fact exists, or that there has been such irregularity in declaring the same as will preclude a proper determination of the question of priority, or which deny the patentability of an applicant's claim, or his right to make the claim, should, if possible, be made not later than the twentieth day after the statements of the parties have been received and approved. Such motions, and all motions of a similar character should be accompanied by a motion to transmit the same to the primary examiner, and such motion to transmit should be noticed for hearing upon a day certain before the examiner of interferences. When in proper form, the motion presented will be transmitted by the examiner of interferences, with the files and papers, to the proper primary examiner for his determination, who will thereupon fix a day certain when the said motion will be heard before him upon the merits, and give notice thereof to all the parties. If a stay of proceedings be desired, a motion therefor should accompany the motion for transmission.

"124. Appeal may be taken directly to the Commissioner from decisions on all motions except the following: (1) On motions to dissolve which deny the patentability of applicant's claim; (2) on motions to dissolve which deny the right of an applicant to make the claim; (3) on motions involving the merits of the invention. Decisions on these motions, when appealable, go to the examiners in chief, in the first instance, and upon such appeals the questions shall be heard inter partes.

"From a decision of the primary examiner affirming the patentability of the claim or the applicant's right to make the same no appeal can be taken."

It will be helpful, in determining the question, to consider the history of the legislation relating to interferences and the rules promulgated from time to time by the Commissioner of Patents. Congress, as early as 1793, recognizing the likelihood of two or more different parties claiming a prior inventorship of the same invention, and the necessity of providing for a determination of such question, made provision therefor, which in some form or other has continued to this day. The Patent Act of 1793 provided that in case of interfering applications, the same should be submitted to three arbitrators, the decision of a majority of whom should be final as far as related to the grant of a patent. This provision remained in force until the Patent Act of 1836. This act created the Patent Office and inaugurated the present examination system, based on novelty as well as usefulness. Under the prior acts it may be stated that patents were granted without examination as to novelty, the only questions being considered were usefulness, importance, and the form of the papers. Section 8 of the act of 1836 provided for the determination of questions of priority of invention between interfering applications and between such applications and unexpired patents. Here first appears the provision for bringing unexpired patents into interference proceedings. Of course the patent could not be recalled or revoked should the interference result in an award of priority to the applicant. The patentee could then, as now, bid defiance to the Patent Office. All that could be done was to issue a patent to the applicant, in which event there would be two outstanding patents for the same invention. Section 16 of the act provided a remedy for this, and also further relief for the applicant should his application for a patent be denied by the decision of the board of examiners. Such relief was by bill in equity, which could be filed by either party, whereupon the court could consider the whole matter de novo, and declare either or both patents void in whole or in part, or, where one party was an applicant, could award a patent to him. In other words, interference proceedings in the Patent Office were not final under the act of 1836, nor have they since been, for similar provisions are found in the later statutes on the subject and are now set forth in sections 4915 and 4918 of the Revised Statutes. Under the act of 1836 the Commissioner was directed to give notice to the parties, and, if either was dissatisfied with his decision on the question of priority made after hearing, an appeal could be taken to a board of three disinterested persons appointed by the Secretary of State, and the decision of a majority was binding upon the Commissioner of Patents. By the Patent Act of 1839 this board was abolished and its powers were vested in the chief justice of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia. The act of 1852 extended a like authority to the assistant judges of the circuit court of said District. The next change in procedure occurred when the Patent Act of March 2, 1861, went into effect. Section 2 of this act provided for the appointment of three examiners-in-chief, whose duty as to appeals in interference proceedings will later be set forth. From their decisions appeals were provided to the Commissioner of Patents. At this time there was no such officer as an examiner of interferences and the control of interferences was in the hands of the various primary examiners. Their decisions in both ex parte and interference cases were appealable successively to the examiners-in-chief, the Commissioner of Patents, and to any one of the justices of the circuit court. The next change occurred when the act known as the "Consolidated Patent Act," approved July, 1870, went into effect. This act provided for the appointment of a special examiner of interferences to decide the question of priority in the first instance, and whose decisions were appealable successively to the examiners-in-chief and to the Commissioner, whose decision was final and so remained until the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia was established in 1893. Section 42 of the act of 1870 contains the provision for interferences. The act of 1870 was repealed by the Revised Statutes of 1874, but section 42 of the earlier act was continued in the same terms as section 4904 of the Revised Statutes, which provides for the decision of the question of priority.

From the foregoing it is apparent that interferences were instituted for the purpose of deciding the question of priority of invention, and for no other purpose, and it logically follows that the reviews or appeals provided were to be from the decisions awarding priority by the officer who was authorized to decide the question of priority in the first instance. For example, the act of 1836 in providing for appeals expressly says that the appeal is one from the decision on the question of priority. The act of 1861 providing for the appointment of examiners-in-chief does not in words specify what the appeals in interference cases are to embrace, but manifestly they could only relate to the question of priority, as that was the only question for the determination of which the interference was instituted. When they came to pass upon the question of priority they doubtless might pass upon such matters as were essential to the correct determination of that question. Neither the statute creating the board of examiners-in-chief, nor any other, provides for motions to dissolve an interference for any reason after it was once declared, and not providing for such motions they do not provide for any appeals therefrom. In fact, motions to dissolve are not the creature of any statute, but of the rules of the Patent Office, and no provision, by Patent Office rules, for such motions was made until many years after the statutes relating to interferences were enacted. Section 42 of the act of 1870, re-enacted in 1874 and now in force and known as section 4904 of the Revised Statutes, in line with the earlier statutes, provides for the institution of interferences for the sole purpose of determining the question of priority of invention, and the fair intendment of section 4909, which provides for appeals in interference cases, is that such appeals only go to the question of priority of invention, for the determination of which they are instituted.

We can not emphasize too strongly that, in our opinion, the statutes relating to interferences only provide that they shall be instituted for the sole purpose of determining priority of invention, and that it logically follows that appeals in such proceedings, so far as the statutes go, only provide for appeals from the decisions of priority. The Commissioner of Patents, under the authority given to regulate the proceedings in the Patent Office, is clothed with power to regulate all interlocutory proceedings in interference cases by rules not inconsistent with law. If he deems it wise to provide, after the interference has once been declared, for remanding the interference to the primary examiner for the purpose of an interlocutory hearing and determination of a motion to dissolve it for any reason which he considers may be in the interest of the public or the parties, we take it that he has full power to do so, and that he may also provide that such motions may or may not in some or all respects be reviewed by the appellate tribunals of the Patent Office, and in so doing he is not thereby depriving any party of any statutory right to have all questions passed upon at final hearing, and on appeals therefrom, which are necessary for a correct determination of the question of priority, which is the sole question for which interferences are declared. If we find that at the time of the enactment of section 4909 there was no provision either in the statutes or the rules of the Patent Office for any such proceeding as a motion to dissolve, we fail to see how it can be assumed that Congress meant to provide for an appeal from the denial of a motion of so plainly an interlocutory character. It would be putting a forced construction upon the statute to so hold. If it be assumed that there is a legal right in a party to an interference, after it is once declared, to make an interlocutory motion for its dissolution before the final hearing on the question of priority, irrespective of any statute or rule, we fail to comprehend upon what principle it can be successfully contended that the right of an appeal to a higher tribunal lies, in the absence of express grant of such an appeal. It is an interlocutory matter, and at best brings up only partially and indirectly the question of priority, and if successive appeals be permitted the result would be only to add another terror to the many surrounding an interference proceeding in the Patent Office. From the simple and summary mode first adopted for determining the question of priority of invention that proceeding, by system of Patent Office rules, has grown to be a veritable old man of the sea, and the unfortunate inventor who becomes involved therein is a second Sinbad the sailor. It is known to all who are familiar with the practice in interference proceedings that by motions, petitions, and appeals of every conceivable character that the ingenuity of the skilled attorney can devise, interferences can be and are prolonged for years, to the injury of the public, and often to the financial ruin of the parties. It does not appear when the present interference was declared, but in view of all the proceedings had, as disclosed by the record, it has been a long time and no testimony has yet been taken. Should we affirm the decision of the court below, the reasons for which are not set forth, and reverse the practice of the Patent Office as it has stood unchanged for at least twenty-five years, we should be placing still another burden of successive piecemeal appeals upon the unfortunate interferant in a proceeding which, when decided, is not final, for, as we have shown, when the defeated party is an applicant he can, if defeated in the Patent Office, proceed by bill in equity under section 4915 of the Revised Statutes to obtain a patent, and if one be finally awarded him he can again try the question of priority with his former successful antagonist under section 4918 of the Revised Statutes. In the present case, as we have shown, should a patent be awarded to Spoon, the question of priority could be at once retried by Lowry, or by Spoon, under the latter section. We refer to this feature of the case with full knowledge that the motives of a party in asserting a legal right can not deprive him of it, and without in the remotest manner intending to question the good faith of Lowry, but because the question is so important to the rights of the public and of inventors, which are best subserved by a speedy grant of lawful patents to rightful parties, and with the least possible expense. We should not, however, in the light of what is really accomplished through an interference, go out of our way, or unduly search for some plausible ground on which to predicate a finding that Lowry has a clear right of appeal from an examiner's decision in an interlocutory proceeding. Such rulings, as we have said, are not appealable prior to final judgment or decree unless it be so provided by statute. Ency. of Pl. and Pr., Vol. 2, page 81.

We have stated in general terms that we find nothing in the statutes permitting an appeal in such interlocutory motions, but before referring more particularly to the statutes in question it will be well to examine the history of interlocutory motions to dissolve interferences, provision for which has from time to time been made by the rules of the Patent Office. The first provision in the rules relating to their dissolution because improperly declared is found in Rule 58 of August 1, 1869, eight years after the creation of the board of examiners-in-chief. This rule says:

"58. Cases of interference will, when the issue is made up and the testimony taken, be tried before an examiner specially detailed for that purpose. If an interference has been properly declared, it will not be dissolved without judgment of priority, founded upon the testimony or the written concession of one of the parties."

It will be seen that this does not, except by inference, provide for a dissolution of an interference, and no ground is stated upon which a motion may be based, save the general one that it has been improperly declared, and no provision of any kind is made for an appeal from any order made after the decision of the motion.

The act of 1870 having provided for an examiner of interferences, provision was made in Rule 59, of July 15, 1870, for their trial before uch officer. Its full provisions are as follows:

"59. Cases of interference will, when the issue is made up and the testimony taken, be tried before the examiner in charge of interferences. If an interference has been properly declared, it will not be dissolved without judgment of priority, founded upon the testimony or the written concession of one of the parties, unless the invention is found not to be patentable, or to have been abandoned, or that it has been in public use for more than two years prior to the application of either party, or that no interference in fact exists."

The last paragraph of this rule, as amended in 1871, contains the first express provision for an interlocutory motion for dissolution of an interference. It says:

"A motion for a dissolution of an interference on the ground that it was improperly declared, if made before the taking of testimony, will be heard by the primary examiner who declared the interference."

On September 1, 1873, the following clause was added to the rule:

"Upon such hearing the primary examiner will recommend the granting or refusal of such motion, and the examiner in charge of interferences will order accordingly."

The rule was changed April 1, 1875, so as to read as follows:

"59. An interference will not be declared until the subject-matter involved is decided to be patentable. If after being declared it is found that no interference in fact exists, or that there has been such irregularity in declaring the same as will preclude the proper determination of the question of right between the parties, it will be dissolved, and an appeal may be taken to the Commissioner in person."

It will be seen that here first is made any provision for an appeal from the decision of the interlocutory proceeding and such appeal was allowed to the Commissioner in person.

November 1, 1876, the phraseology of this rule was changed in matters not material to the question under consideration and the following clause added to it: "But if the examiner should decide that the subject-matter is not patentable in view of the state of the art the interference will be dissolved and the matter decided upon can be proceeded with ex parte." Without material modification this rule remained in force until the general revision of rules of December 1, 1879, when the following rules relating to dissolution were adopted:

"116. Motions to dissolve an interference which deny the patentability of an applicant's claim, or his right to make the claim, will be submitted to the examiner of interferences before the day fixed for filing the statements provided for in Rules 97, 101, and 102, and will be transmitted by him, with the files and papers, to the primary examiner, who will take jurisdiction of the case for the determination of such motions, and will return the files and papers to the examiner of interferences, with his decision, at the expiration of the time limited for appeal, if no appeal shall have been taken, or sooner if the party entitled to appeal shall file a waiver in writing of his right of appeal; and such decision will be binding on the examiner of interferences unless revised or modified on appeal. From a decision of the primary examiner on such motion, denying the patentability of a claim or the right of an applicant to make it, an appeal may be taken ex parte to the examiners-in-chief; but from his decision affirming its patentability or the applicant's right no appeal can be taken.

"117. Motions to dissolve an interference upon the ground that no interference in fact exists, or that there has been such irregularity in declaring the same as will preclude the proper determination of the question of priority between the parties, and all other lawful motions except those mentioned in Rule 116, will be made before the tribunal having jurisdiction at the time. . . .

"118. Appeal may be taken directly to the commissioner from decisions on all motions, except motions to dissolve interferences denying the patentability of applicants' claims or their right to make the claims, and other lawful motions involving the merits of the case, which, when appealable, may be appealed to the board or examiners-in-chief (see Rules 116, 141)."

Here first appears provision for an interlocutory motion to dissolve an interference upon the ground that a party to it has not the right to make the interfering claim, which was the ground urged by Lowry upon the hearing of his motion. The provisions for appeals are found in Rules 116 and 118, which provide an appeal to the examiners-in-chief from (among other decisions) one denying the right of an applicant to make the interfering claim. No provision is made for an appeal from a decision affirming his right to make the interfering claim. September 15, 1880, the following clause was added to Rule 118, and it has been ever since in force. It reads, "from a decision affirming the patentability of the claim, or the applicant's right to make the same, no appeal can be taken." This clause simply makes clear and positive the then well-settled rule of the office that no appeal was permitted in any proceeding where the examiner held that a claim was patentable to the party making it. The Commissioner, however, was of course not debarred from exercising his supervisory power and for lawful reasons reversing the holding of the examiner and refusing to allow the claim. From that time on changes have been made in the rules relating to the conduct of interferences until the rules have the phraseology shown in present Rules 122 and 124. It will be seen that at no time has an appeal been provided from a decision rendered on hearing an interlocutory motion for a dissolution of an interference affirming the right of a party to make the interfering claim.

It is urged on behalf of appellees that Rule 55 of July 15, 1870, and Rule 55 of 1871 (the latter when read in the light of Rule 48 of the same date), provided for appeals to the examiners-in-chief from decisions on interlocutory motions for the dissolution of interferences. These rules are as follows:

"55. In cases of interference, parties have the same remedy by appeal as other applicants, to the examiners-in-chief and to the Commissioner, but no appeal lies in such cases from the decision of the Commissioner. Appeals in interference cases should be accompanied by a brief statement of the reasons thereof.

"55. In cases of interferences appeals may be taken to the examiners-in-chief and to the Commissioner in the manner provided in Rule 48.

"48. In cases of interference parties have the same remedy by appeal to the examiners-in-chief and to the Commissioner, as in ex parte cases, but no appeal lies in such cases from the decision of the Commissioner." . . .

We do not so read them, because at the time of their promulgation there were in force no rules providing for such motions, and, secondly, because the statute of 1870 relating to appeals provides that the appeals in interference were only from final decisions awarding priority.

Nor, as we have said, can authority for appeals in such matters to the examiners-in-chief be predicated upon the clause of Rule 59 of 1875. The 1877 Rule 59 is, in respect to appeals, very similar to that of 1875, but counsel for appellees seem to have overlooked that rule and considered Rule 59 of 1877 as a new rule. They have not quite correctly quoted Rule 59 of 1877. But both rules give the right of appeal, not to the examiners-in-chief, but to the Commissioner, and it will be remembered that at this date no provision was made in the rules for interlocutory motions to dissolve interferences on the ground that a party to it had not the right to make the interfering claim.

While we recognize the rule, as laid down in Houghton v. Payne, 194 U. S. 88, and in other decisions of the Supreme Court, that if a practice is contrary to law it is not made lawful by the practice of a department for a long period of time, yet due regard should be given to a practice which admittedly has prevailed for more than twenty-five years in proceedings of a judicial character, even should there be a reasonable doubt in the mind of the court as to the proper construction to be placed upon a statute. The Supreme Court said in Bate Refrigerating Co. v. Sulzberger, 157 U. S. 1:

". . . If the statute be not so explicit as to preclude construction; if upon applying to it the established rules of interpretation; if looking at it in the light of previous legislation on the subject, if there be reasonable ground for adopting one of two constructions; this court, without departing from sound principle, may well adopt that construction which is in harmony with the settled practice of the executive branch of the Government."

With such light as is afforded from a consideration of prior statutes and the rules made by the Commissioner of Patents under statutory authority, we will more fully consider section 4909, which is the same as section 46 of the act of July 8, 1870. Provision was first made for a board of examiners-in-chief by section 2 of the act of March 2, 1861. That section provided that the duty of the board was "on the written petition of the applicant for that purpose being filed, to revise and determine upon the validity of decisions made by examiners when adverse to the grant of letters patent and also to revise and determine in like manner upon the validity of the decisions of examiners in interference cases," etc. Manifestly, the appellate power to revise the decision of examiners in interference cases referred to such decisions as examiners then had the power to make in such proceedings, and we are not referred to any statute or Patent Office rule, nor have we been able to discover any such statute or rule, which gave to the examiners any question for them to decide but that of priority. There was at that time no statutory authority lodged in examiners to decide interference cases, but as the business of the Patent Office increased it became necessary for the Commissioner of Patents to delegate more and more of his duties to his assistants, but no statutory authority is shown to have been given to the Commissioner at this time to decide more than the question of priority of invention. Undoubtedly it was within his power and his duty in deciding that question to examine and decide all ancillary matters necessary to the correct determination of the main question, and when he delegated his authority in interference cases, so far as he could, to his assistants, it is fair to presume that such ancillary questions, if necessary to the decision of the question of priority, could be examined and decided by them. But it by no means follows that such ancillary questions were to be decided by him, or them, in advance of the decision of the main question—that of priority. Therefore we conclude that when an appeal was given to the examiners-in-chief to review the decisions of examiners in interference cases, Congress had not in mind to confer power of review upon them except as to the question of priority, and such ancillary questions as the examiners had passed upon when deciding the question of priority for which the interference was instituted. When section 46 of the act of 1870 was written there had been created an examiner of interferences, who took the place of the examiners in deciding the only question for which an interference is instituted. Therefore we find provision made for appeals from his decisions, and this was carried forward in section 4909 of the revision. For convenience, we again set forth this section:

"Sec. 4909. Every applicant for a patent or for the reissue of a patent, any of the claims of which have been twice rejected, and every party to an interference, may appeal from the decision of the primary examiner, or of the examiner in charge of interferences in such case, to the board of examiners-in-chief, having once paid the fee for such appeal."

In the light of the previous statutes we think that the proper construction to be placed on this section is as though it read, every applicant for a patent or for the reissue of a patent, any of the claims of which have been twice rejected, may appeal from the decision of the primary examiner, and every party to an interference may appeal from the decision of the examiner in charge of interferences in such case, to the board of examiners-in-chief. In other words, to abbreviate and make the section more succinct the words "may appeal from the decision" were used but once, but we think that thereby clearness was sacrificed for brevity. We are also of the opinion that the decisions relating to interferences, referred to in sections 482, 4904, and 4909 of the Revised Statues, from which appeals are allowed to the examiners-in-chief and from them to the Commissioner of Patents, are final decisions and not such as are made in interlocutory matters which do not of themselves preclude and prevent a decision of the question of priority, which is, as we have said, the purpose for which interferences are instituted.

The act of 1893 which created this court provides that "any party aggrieved by a decision of the Commissioner of Patents in any interference case may appeal therefrom to said Court of Appeals." We have construed that clause to refer only to final decisions by the Commissioner in interference cases, and have refused to take jurisdiction and decide interlocutory questions sought to be brought before us on appeal in advance of an appeal taken in such cases to review a final decision awarding priority of invention. As we said in Westinghouse v. Duncan, 2 App. D. C. 131, in referring to appeals allowed by the statute, "the terms of the statute should receive a reasonable interpretation and be so construed as to avoid multiplying litigation or producing unnecessary delay and expense to the parties concerned, and to prevent, as far as possible, embarassment and hindrance to the proceedings in the Patent Office." We think this reasoning applies equally to appeals in the Patent Office in interlocutory proceedings in interferences. There should be some limit on appeals, for where three millions of dollars have been invested, as stated in this case, by the party holding the patent, there is every incentive to prolong the proceedings until the expiration of the patent, and if then the applicant is successful it means a second patent for 17 years, and the public, instead of paying tribute for 17 years, will have had a patent monopoly existing for twice that period, or for a goodly portion of it.

The power to decide the question of priority, which is the sole question for which interferences were provided, as shown by a reading of every statute on the subject enacted from 1793 down to the present time, having been transferred from the examiners generally to the particular examiner designated as the examiner of interferences, it became necessary to transfer this right of appeal in interferences from the decisions of such examiners to the examiner of interferences. It was not, as an examination of the rules of the Patent Office has shown, until 1871 that any provision was made for the dissolution of an interference before testimony had been taken and before a decision on the question of priority was in order. Whether in the light of experience it has proven to have been in the interest of interferants and of the public, to provide the elaborate system of preliminary or interlocutory motions to dissolve interferences, which has been the outgrowth of the power lodged in the Commissioner under section 483, is perhaps a debatable question. However that may be, we think it clearly within his power in making provision for these interlocutory motions to limit the right of appeal where, as in the present case, the examiner has held that the applicant had the right to make the claims of the interference. Whatever right the relators may have to the judgment of the appellate tribunals of the Patent Office and of this court upon the question of an absence of right in Spoon to make the interfering claims because his device is inoperative, we think that right is not through an appeal from the refusal of the examiner to dissolve an interference upon the hearing of an interlocutory motion made for that purpose, where no right of appeal is granted by the rule under which the motion is made. We take it that the Commissioner could abrogate bote Rules 122 and 124 without depriving parties to an interference of any statutory right. If he has the right to make rules for interlocutory motions, he certainly has the right to repeal them.

The right of a party to make the claim of an interference is not finally determined by the decision of the examiner on a motion for a dissolution. This is clearly shown by Rule 126 of the Patent Office under which the examiner of interferences or the examiners-in-chief before or on deciding the question of priority are authorized to call the attention of the Commissioner to the fact that no interference exists, or that there is a statutory bar to the grant of a patent, etc., whereupon the interference may be remanded to the primary examiner for examination and decision. Appeals are allowed from his decision as in other cases. It is not necessary in this proceeding to construe this rule or to pass upon the question whether the lack of a right of party to an interference to make a claim by reason of the inoperativeness of the invention disclosed in his application, does or does not relate to the question of priority as referred to in said rule. However this may be, it would seem that it might in many cases be quite difficult to decide the question of priority where the evidence showed that the device disclosed in the application was not operative. It will be time, however, to decide that question when it is presented in a case where we are called upon to decide the question of priority. We have, however, reviewed other ancillary questions when they have properly come before us on appeals from final judgments awarding priority of invention. Stevens v. Sehr, 11 App. D. C. 245. We have declined to entertain appeals from decisions of the Patent Office that were not final decisions.

We are clearly of the opinion that the court below erred in granting the petition for the writ of mandamus. Our reasons, summarized, are these: That a motion to dissolve an interference before the final hearing of the question of priority, and before the case is ready for such hearing, is an interlocutory proceeding and is not appealable unless made so by statute or rule of court; that no statute, and, more specifically stated, neither sections 482, 4904, or 4909 of the Revised Statutes, nor any rule of the Patent Office made by the Commissioner, gives the right of appeal to the examiners-in-chief from decisions made by the principal examiners on the hearing of a motion to dissolve, holding that a party has the right to make the claim which is the issue of an interference; that where the statute gives the right of appeal in interferences from decisions of any officer of original jurisdiction it means final decisions; that the right to such an appeal should be clear, and that if there is any doubt, although we believe there be none, as to the construction of the statutes claimed to confer the right, such doubt should be resolved in favor of the long established and acquiesced-in practice of the Patent Office, which we believe is in the interest of interferants; that the provision for interlocutory motions to dissolve interferences is the creature of a rule and not founded on statutory enactment and that a party to an interference is not deprived of any statutory right to an appeal by reason of the rules not providing for an appeal from a decision of the examiner that a party has a right to make the interfering claim; that whatever right a party to an interference has to contest the right of his adversary to make the interfering claim, such right if denied is reviewable, if at all, upon the final decision of the question of priority, and such right of appeal as he has to have that question decided is to be considered on the hearing of the statutory appeals allowed from the decision of the question of priority by the examiner of interferences.

The relators not having shown that they have a clear right of appeal which has been denied are not entitled to the writ of mandamus and therefore the court below erred in granting the order of January 14, 1905, awarding a writ of mandamus directing the Commissioner of Patents to direct the examiners-in-chief to reinstate and take jurisdiction of Lowry's appeal and to entertain and consider the merits thereof and to decide the same upon the merits. It follows that the order granting the writ of mandamus should be reversed, with costs, with directions to discharge the rule to show cause and to dismiss the petition. It is so ordered.

Smith et al., decided by the Court of Appeals of Maryland, the plaintiffs sued to recover for 633 cases of tomatoes, relying upon the delivery to one of the defendants of a couple of cans of tomatoes at the time of the alleged sale. The evidence showed that the cans were given as samples, and were not intended to be included in the sale. It was held that the receipt of the sample cans did not comply with the requirements of the statute of frauds that part of the goods sold shall be received and accepted by the buyer to render the transaction a valid sale, in the absence of a note or memorandum in writing being signed, or of something being given in earnest to bind the bargain.

Railroads — Negligence—Accident at Crossing.—A street railroad company held negligent in backing engine across city street in the evening without a light on the engine or a lookout. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Hays' Admr., Ky., 84 S. W. Rep. 338.

Adverse Possession — Use by Owner and Others.—Title by adverse possession held not acquired, where land is used equally by persons having the paper title and others. Spencer Christian Church's Trustees v. Thomas, Ky., 84 S. W. Rep. 750.

Equity—"No Wrong Without a Remedy."—An injury which the written law renders a nonactionable wrong, or not a wrong at all, is not within the maxim that "there is no wrong without a remedy."—Pietsch v. Milbrath, Wis., 102 N. W. Rep. 342.

Alteration of Instruments — Acknowledgment.—Attaching false acknowledgment to a contract employing a broker to sell land, and the signing of the agreement by the broker and a witness without the owner's knowledge after execution, are not material alterations. Canfield v. Orange, N. Dak., 102 N. W. Rep. 313.

Bankruptcy — Partnership — Individual Assets.—Where a bankrupt firm had no assets, and both partners were insolvent, the entire individual estate of one of the partners was applicable to his individual creditors.—In re Janes, U. S. C. C. of App., Second Circuit, 133 Fed. Rep. 912.

Bankruptcy—Landlord's Lien.—Where property of a bankrupt subject to a landlord's lien was sold under an agreement with the trustee that the lien should attach to the fund derived therefrom, the lien was preserved for the benefit of the landlord.—In re Bourlier Cornice & Roofing Co., U. S. D. C., W. D. Ky., 133 Fed. Rep. 958.

License Taxes—Master Bricklayers Not "Building Contractors."

In Wilson v. District of Columbia, the question involved was whether a contracting bricklayer is a "building contractor" within the meaning of the provision of the license law imposing a license tax of $25 upon "building and other contractors." The Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Shepard, holds that he is not, and therefore reverses a judgment of the Police Court convicting the defendant of a violation of the law in failing to pay the tax. The proceeding was a test case to determine the question of the liability of contracting bricklayers to the payment of the tax. In the prior case of Chapman v. District of Columbia, the Court of Appeals held that the term "other contractors" in the statute was too indefinite to be enforced.

Equity—Contempt Proceeding for Violation of Injunction—Failure to Give Undertaking.

In Drew et al. v. Hogan et al., the appeal was from an order adjudging the appellants guilty of a contempt of court in disobeying an injunction. It appeared that the complainants in the proceeding had failed to give an undertaking, as required by Equity Rule 42 of the Supreme Court of the District, before the issue of the injunction, the terms of which it was alleged had been disobeyed by the appellants. For this reason, without passing upon any other question in the case, the Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Duell, holds that the injunction was inoperative. The order of the court below was therefore reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the opinion.

Treasury Draft; Lien of Attorneys; Service by Publication.

In Jones v. Rutherford, a question of considerable importance to attorneys prosecuting claims against the United States was involved. That question was, whether a Treasury draft, issued and about to be delivered, is such a species of property as will justify service by publication in a litigation instituted to establish the lien of the attorney therein for his services. The Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Morris, which affirms the ruling of the court below, holds that such a draft is "personal property within the District," within the meaning of section 105 of the District Code, authorizing service by publication upon non-residents in suits for the enforcement of "liens against real or personal property within the District."

Bankruptcy; Suit by Trustee to Enjoin Payment of Treasury Draft.

In Bryan v. Curtis, the suit was by a trustee in bankruptcy to enjoin the Secretary of the Treasury from paying over to a foreign administratrix moneys appropriated by Congress as indemnity for the destruction of certain property. The Secretary of the Treasury appeared and demurred to the bill, and the administratrix appeared specially to object to the jurisdiction of the court on the ground that she was a non-resident and entitled to be sued at her place of residence. The trial court sustained the demurrer filed by the Secretary of the Treasury and dismissed the bill. The Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Shepard, reverses this ruling, holding that the case was not in proper shape for dismissal, inasmuch as the real party in interest, the administratrix, had only appeared specially, and the Secretary had no real interest in the controversy. The court intimates that a preliminary injunction might properly be granted to preserve the status quo until the administratrix could be brought before the court by publication or otherwise.

Deeds; Mental Capacity of Grantor.

In Critchfield et al. v. Easterday, the suit was brought to set aside a deed of trust and deed in fee on the ground that, at the time of their execution, the grantor was mentally incompetent. The Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Morris, affirms the decree of the court below, which held that the evidence showed that the grantor, though mentally infirm, had frequent lucid intervals, and that the deeds in question were executed by her during such lucid periods, and also that it appeared the proceeds of the deed of trust were in large part used for her benefit.

Wills; Construction of Bequest; Held to Give Only Life Estate.

In Vogt et al. v. Vogt et al., the suit was brought to construe a will. The principal question was whether a certain bequest gave an absolute estate in personalty to a son of the testator, or only a life estate, with remainder to his children. On this question the Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Shepard, held that the son took only a life estate, with remainder to his children. The decree of the court below was therefore reversed.

Admiralty; Salvage.

In the case of James Clark Company v. Ferryboat "Columbia," the proceeding was in admiralty to recover salvage for saving the ferryboat from destruction by fire. The Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Duell, in which humorous reference is made to the conflicting character of the testimony, reverses the decree of the court below, on the ground that the allowance to the libellant should have been of the sum of $200 instead of $100, and directs the entry of a decree for the larger amount.

Vagrancy; Evidence Insufficient to Sustain Conviction.

In Fields v. District of Columbia, the plaintiff in error was convicted in the Police Court upon an information charging him with vagrancy. It appeared that, in the daytime, he drove a grocery wagon, and at night was accustomed to play a piano in one of the houses in the "Division." The Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Morris, holds the evidence insufficient to support a conviction, and therefore reverses the judgment.

Criminal Law; Larceny; Drunkenness as Defense.

In Ryan v. United States, the appellant was convicted of the larceny of certain trunks. The trial court excluded evidence offered in his behalf, that he was drunk at the time he committed the offense. It appeared, however, that he retained the property after he became sober, and the evidence was not of such a character as to show that he was so drunk as to be without volition. The Court of Appeals affirms the judgment, in an opinion by Mr. Chief Justice Shepard.

Smoke Law; Government Official Liable for Violation of.

In Palmer v. District of Columbia, the question involved was as to whether the plaintiff in error, a Government official, was liable for a violation of the anti-smoke law, so called. He was convicted in the Police Court and fined, and the Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Morris, affirms the judgment. The court construes the law as applicable to Government buildings as well as to private institutions, and says that the fact that a person charged with its violation is a Government official does not relieve him from its penalties. Mr. Chief Justice Shepard dissents, holding that the law does not apply to public buildings of the United States located in this District.

In Jones v. Starr (No. 301) and In re Application of Mark Cross Company (No. 303), decisions of the Commissioner of Patents were affirmed, in opinions by Mr. Justice Duell.

Amendment of Common Law Rule No. 2, Relating to Attorneys.

The following amendment to Common Law Rule No. 2, of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, was promulgated by the court in General Term, on June 15, 1905:

The following is adopted as a substitute for section 6 of the Common Law Rule No. 2:

6. Dishonesty, misconduct in office, conviction of crime involving moral turpitude, or unprofessional conduct involving moral turpitude, shall be cause for suspending or removing any attorney from the office of member of the bar of this court.

7. Whenever complaint in writing shall be presented to this court in General Term, charging a member of the bar of the court with any of the causes for suspension or removal, and setting forth the facts upon which the accusation is grounded, such complaint shall be forthwith referred to a standing committee of five members of the bar of the court, to be known as the Committee on Grievances, to be appointed by the court, and who shall serve for one year and until their successors are appointed; and it shall be the duty of said committee forthwith to investigate such complaint and to report thereon to the court, stating whether the committee deem the facts, as ascertained by them, to be insufficient to support such complaint or deem it proper upon such facts that the member so charged should be called upon to answer.

8. In the latter event a charge shall be formulated by the committee and submitted with such report, and if the court shall so order, shall be filed with the clerk of the court. Whereupon the following proceedings shall be had: A copy of the charge, certified by the clerk, together with a notification that at a time to be designated therein, the court will proceed to hear and determine the same, shall be forthwith served upon such member by the marshal, or otherwise as the court may direct in case of inability of the marshal to serve the same.

Said committee, by one or more of its members, shall present and prosecute such charges, and the same shall be tried. Upon all hearings subsequent to the filing thereof the respondent shall be entitled to be present, to be heard by himself or counsel, and upon the trial to present evidence in his defense.

If upon the trial the court shall find the respondent guilty of the charge, he may be removed from office and his name stricken from the roll of attorneys and counsellors of the court, or he may be suspended from practice before the court during such time as the court may deem proper.

9. If, at any time, the conduct of a member of the bar of the court, in any judicial proceeding therein, with which proceeding such member was or is connected as counsel or otherwise, shall appear to the court at general or special term to be a proper subject of inquiry, then and in such case the matter may be referred by such court to the said committee on grievances, with directions to investigate the same and to report thereon, and if the said committee shall recommend that such member be called upon to answer in respect of his said conduct, the committee shall formulate against such member such charge as the circumstances may require and submit the same to the court with their said report to be dealt with as in section 8 provided.

10. It shall furthermore be the duty of said committee to inquire into all cases of alleged misconduct of members of the bar, which shall otherwise come to their notice and which, if true, would constitute cause for suspension or removal as above defined; and if upon such inquiry the committee shall in any instance deem the case a proper one for action by the court, the committee shall so report to the court and shall formulate such charge of misbehavior as the circumstances may require and submit the same to the court with their report, to be dealt with as in section 8 provided.

11. If service can not be had upon an accused member of the bar, of a charge preferred against him under the provisions of the foregoing sections, the court may, in its discretion, order that such member shall be suspended from practice until such service shall be had, and in the meantime no paper signed by him as attorney and relating to any legal proceeding in the court shall be recorded or filed in the clerk's office.

12. Nothing herein shall be construed to deprive the court of power, upon its own initiative, to direct the preferring of charges against a member of the bar, and the trial thereof, or of the power to appoint prosecutors to present and prosecute the same, or to deprive the court of any other power in the premises which it may possess.

By an order of the court in general term, passed on the same day, the following named gentlemen were appointed as the Committee on Grievances provided for by section 7: Mr. Wm. F. Mattingly, chairman; Mr. J. J. Darlington, Mr. Henry P. Blair, Mr. Alex. H. Bell, and Mr. Adolph A. Hoehling, Jr.

Husband and Wife—Gifts.—The fact that the husband handed to his wife all his earnings from week to week, from which to pay the family expenses, does not constitute a gift to the wife of any surplus over such expenses.—Fretz v. Roth (N. J.), 59 Atl. Rep. 676.

Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

JAMES W. WHELPLEY ET AL., APPELLANTS,
v.
SAMUEL ROSS.

EQUITY; SEALED INSTRUMENTS; SUIT BY UNDISCLOSED PRINCIPAL; BUILDING ASSOCIATIONS; LOANS TO SHAREHOLDERS; USURY; MATURITY OF STOCK.

1. The rule of the common law, that an undisclosed principal can not maintain a suit upon a sealed instrument, is not applicable in equity.
2. M, acting in behalf of R, but without disclosing his principal, borrowed a certain sum from a building association, and, to secure a bond given by him to the association, executed a deed of trust of real estate owned by R, but the legal title to which was vested in M. Held, that upon performance of the condition of the bond R was entitled to sue in equity to procure the release of the property from the deed of trust.
3. When the promise to pay a sum above legal interest depends upon a contingency, and not upon the happening of a certain event, the loan is not usurious.
4. An agreement between a building and loan association and a borrowing shareholder, by which it appeared that a bond given by the latter should be regarded as satisfied and be entitled to a release of the deed of trust securing the same whenever the stock in his name should, by payments by the holder and profits accruing from the operations of the association (which profits were, of course, contingent), become of the full value of $200, held not upon its face to involve a usurious transaction.
5. The by-laws of a building association provided that when shares of stock in a series should have reached the full value of $200 each, or loans to the full amount of every share had been made, the shares should all be paid off and the series discharged. It appeared that all shareholders in a given series had been paid off except those in the name of a borrowing shareholder. Held, that inasmuch as the profits of the association were applicable equally to the shares of borrowing as well as non-borrowing shareholders, and all the shares must mature at the same time, the shares held by him must be regarded as having matured.
6. Held, that the complainant in the present case was entitled to have a release of his property from the deed of trust, but not in this suit to a repayment to him of the money claimed by him to have been overpaid.

No. 1461. Decided March 21, 1905.

APPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in Equity, No. 24,253, in suit to procure release of deed of trust, etc. Modified and affirmed.

Mr. O. B. Hallam and Mr. W. M. Hallam for the appellants.

Mr. E. H. Thomas and Mr. F. H. Stephens for the appellee.

Mr. Justice MORRIS delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is a controversy between a so-called building association and one known as a "borrowing stockholder."

A number of persons, whose names are not given, combined in this District to form a voluntary unincorporated association known and designated as the Eastern Building and Loan Association, with the nine appellants first above mentioned as its directors, the purpose of which was, according to the usual programme of building associations, and according to the specification in the first article of its by-laws, "to receive from and to loan to stockholders its funds, subject to the by-laws."

On March 13, 1893, one George W. Montgomery, an employee in the office of the appellee Ross, and conceding to have been acting as an agent for the latter in the transaction, borrowed from the association the sum of $2,200, having for the purpose become a stockholder to the extent of eleven shares of stock, for which he subscribed, and which were issued to him at the time. It would appear that the money was put up at auction and that Montgomery became the highest bidder therefor by an offer to pay a premium of 70 cents on each sum of $100, or on each share of stock, which practically amounted to the same thing. For the repayment of the amount he executed and delivered to the association a bond under seal, conditioned for the payment in each month of $2.70 on each share of stock held by him, and all fines and forfeitures that might be incurred by him under the "constitution" of the association, until "full settlement should be made, as provided in such constitution;" and to secure this bond he gave a deed of trust by way of mortgage on real estate standing in his name, although really owned by the appellee Ross, and which real estate adjoined the city of Washington. The payment of $2.70 to be made monthly is stated to be $1 for principal, $1 for interest, and 70 cents as premium, and the whole payment to be made by the appellee on his eleven shares of stock was $29.70, which he continued to pay from the first Wednesday of March, 1893, to and including the first Wednesday of July, 1903, a period of 125 months, during which the whole amount paid by him would seem to have amounted to the sum of $3,712.50.

What is called the "constitution" of the association would seem to have been no more than a series of by-laws, and which in fact are designated as by-laws, of which thirty-six are enumerated in the record. These provide for the mode of operation of the association, which is not too clearly set forth; for very much is left to inference, possibly because the mode of operation of such association was generally well known. So far as we are informed by the record the principal features, so far as they concern the present case, were these:

The members of the association were designated as stockholders, and it would seem that any one could at any time become a stockholder, either for the purpose of borrowing money from it, or for the purpose of investing his money at a profit; and it does not appear that there was any limitation upon the amount of stock which one might acquire further than the amount for which he desired to pay, if he was an investor, or than the amount which he desired to borrow, if he proposed to become a borrower. The theory appears to have been that the so-called stock, when subscribed for—for no stock in the ordinary sense of the term seems to have been ever issued—represented the measure of the payments which the stockholders desired to make for their investment; that, if they desired merely to invest, they paid into the association at the rate of $1 a month for each share, and no other payment was required of them, except for fines and penalties, if any they should incur, and that they were required to pay only until by such payments and by the profits of the association from loans and from fines and penalties the stock should become of the full value of $200 a share, when the money was to be divided and the association dissolved. Or rather the organization was planned to be of indefinite duration by the issue, if we may so call it, of successive series of stock, of which each series constituted an organization in itself, independent of every other series, although the same persons might hold stock in the different series or in all the series. Each series was to be closed and dissolved when the stock in it became of the full value of $200 a share, and the limit of stock in each series was the amount that should be subscribed for within six months.

The association seems to have been organized in the year 1889, and in the year 1903, when these proceedings were instituted, there had been twenty-six series of stock issued. Of these Ross, through his agent Montgomery, was in the ninth, and at the time of the institution of the suit Montgomery was the only stockholder and his stock the only stock outstanding in that series. All the other stockholders had been settled with. At least, the answer of the defendants avers that all the "non-borrowing" stockholders in that series, as well as in several other series, had "been paid off in full."

Section 17 of the by-laws provides that each stockholder should pay into the association one dollar each month for each share of stock held by him during the continuance of the series to which his stock belonged. And, as we have stated, this was all the payment that was required of investing or non-borrowing stockholders, other than possible fines and penalties.

Section 30 provided that stockholders might withdraw at any time, after giving one month's notice; and if there was money in the treasury available for the purpose, should receive what is called the withdrawal value of their stock, which was the aggregate amount of the periodical payments made by them, and sixty (60) per centum of the profit on each share of stock in the series, as reported in the last previous semi-annual statement.

Section 33 provided that when every share of stock in a series should have reached the full value of $200, or whenever loans to the full value of every share of stock should have been made, each stockholder should receive the sum of $200 in money for each share of stock held by him; or, in case a loan should have been granted to him, the bond and mortgage should be satisfied or released, and the series should be dissolved.

Three sections provided specifically in regard to loans. They were sections 19, 20, and 26.

Section 19 provided that, when there was more than $200 in the treasury not subject to withdrawal, the board of directors should offer it at public auction to the highest bidder; who either was then or should thereupon become a stockholder in order to be entitled to receive the same, and who should have subscribed for one share of stock for each sum of $200 required.

Section 20 provided that the borrower, in addition to the sum of $1 a month required to be paid by all stockholders on each share of stock, should pay, also, 6 per centum per annum interest on the amount of the loan, being $1 a month on each share of stock or sum of $200, and also the rate of premium on each share per month for priority of loan.

Section 26 provided that borrowing stockholders might repay their loans and either continue their stock in the association or receive the withdrawal value thereof if they desired to withdraw it, in which event it should revert to the association.

Under these circumstances the appellee Ross on October 21, 1903, filed his bill in equity in the Supreme Court of the District against the board of directors of the association, Montgomery, and the trustees under the deed of trust given to secure the loan, and in it, after stating the loan and the execution of the bond and deed of trust, he alleged that, by a just accounting, he had overpaid his indebtedness on the loan by the sum of $867.86; that the transaction was usurious; that Montgomery acted in it as his (Ross') agent; that the property belonged to the complainant and Montgomery had no beneficial interest in it; that he (the complainant) had demanded from the association a release of the deed of trust, which was refused unless a further sum, claimed to be due under the loan, was paid; and that the association threatened to order a sale of the property for failure to pay the further dues demanded. And he prayed for a repayment of the amount claimed by him to have been overpaid, for a cancellation of the bond, and a release of the deed of trust.

The board of directors of the association and the two trustees under the deed of trust joined in one answer, in which they admitted the transaction between Montgomery and the association, but averred that it was not a loan, but an advance upon his stock; and that payments for two or three years more would be required to make his stock equal to $200 a share, and to entitle him to a release of the deed of trust. In the answer there is also this averment, which is deemed to be important, and which therefore we transcribe in full:

"These defendants say, that, while the word loan is used in the by-laws, the transaction hereinbefore referred to was really an advance on the said several shares of stock to the full value thereof, and the said association was organized and the said transaction had on the faith of the long settled law in this District, as determined by the highest courts thereof, that such transactions were fully legitimate and authorized by law. Said association consists of and has always consisted of, from time to time, a large and shifting number of stockholders or members. It has now reached its 26th series, and the first six series and the 8th, 10th, 11th, and 12th series have been paid off and settled in full, and all the non-borrowing stockholders in the 7th, 9th, and 13th to 19th series, inclusive, have been paid off in full; and all this while the said Montgomery was a member; and the amount received from him as interest and premium went into and was computed as part of the profits and value of the shares of stock in each of said series. Those series were settled by reason of the accumulation of funds for which no bids were made and which the association was therefore unable to loan or advance to stockholders, and the said Montgomery and the plaintiff were well aware of this condition of affairs and of these retirements of stock so made, so that they are estopped to claim any refund for any overpayment, whatever may be their rights as to a refusal to make further payments."

Montgomery answered, substantially admitting all the allegations of the complainant's bill, and consequently his own agency for Ross in the transaction and Ross' ownership of the property.

Instead of testimony a stipulation was entered into between the parties and filed in the cause, whereby it was agreed that certain facts should be taken as proved, and that the cause should be heard on the bill and answers and this stipulation so far as it modified the pleadings. The facts stated in the stipulation, which included as an exhibit annexed to it a copy of the constitution or by-laws of the association, were substantially those which have heretofore been mentioned. They included also the statement that neither the complainant nor Montgomery had any other connection with the association, or held any stock therein, other than the transaction which has been set forth. Included in the stipulation also was the fact that semi-annual statements had always been issued showing the value of the stock in the ninth series, and that in the statement of July 31, 1901, the value was shown to be $129.33 for each share.

The court rendered a decree, whereby the complainant was adjudged to recover the sum of $867.86 from the nine defendants, who constituted the board of directors; and it was ordered that the stock issued to Montgomery and the bond given by him should be cancelled, and that the deed of trust should be released by the trustees. From this decree all the defendants, except Montgomery, have appealed.

1. The first contention of the appellants under their assignments of error, is that the appellee, not being a party to the bond executed by Montgomery to the building association, is not entitled to maintain this suit, in view of the well-settled rule of the common law, applicable to instruments of writing under seal, although not, as it would seem, to simple contracts, that only the parties named or described in such sealed instruments, or those in privity with them, which undisclosed principals are not, are entitled to sue or liable to be sued thereon. But we think that this contention is untenable, for the reason that the rule, except in special or exceptional cases, is not applicable in equity.

As we understand it, the complainant in this case, although in the bill of complaint he prays for the cancellation of the bond given by Montgomery and of the stock issued to him, as by the structure of his bill he was probably compelled to do, is neither seeking to enforce that bond nor to rescind it, or to be relieved from its operation. If we regard that bond alone and as standing by itself, the complainant may be said to have no interest whatever in it. What he is interested in is to relieve his property from the operation of the deed of trust given thereon by Montgomery, upon the assumption that the purpose had been satisfied for which the deed of trust had been given—in other words, that the condition of the bond, which the deed of trust had been given to secure, had been fully performed. It is conceded, and whether it is conceded or not, we must hold, under our decision in the case of the Loan Association v. Baker, 19 D. C. App. 1: 29 Wash. Law. Rep. 783, that, if the complainant, subsequently to the transaction between Montgomery and the building association, had received from Montgomery a deed of conveyance of the property, he would have been entitled to sue in equity to free the property from the incumbrance upon it, if in fact the liability secured had been discharged. The privity of estate would have entitled him to maintain such suit.

But it is argued that because he has no such conveyance he can not maintain the suit. The argument, we think, is without merit. Had it been necessary for the complainant for any reason to have recourse to a court of equity in a suit against Montgomery alone to establish in himself a resulting trust in the property standing in the name of Montgomery, it is beyond question that, upon such showing as is made in this record and especially upon the admission of Montgomery, he would be entitled to a decree for a conveyance to him, or to its equivalent, a decree establishing the title in himself under a resulting trust. Now, in the present case, Montgomery concedes the title to be in him, and no one controverts the fact that he is the true owner of the property. There is, therefore, no good reason why he should not be entitled to maintain this suit, which might perhaps be regarded as the consolidation of two equitable proceedings in one.

Three cases are cited in favor of the proposition that equity will not, any more than the common law, maintain a suit by an undisclosed principal to enforce the obligation of a sealed instrument. They are Briggs v. Partridge, 64 N. Y. 357; Barcherling v. Katz, 37 N. J. Eq. 156, and a case in the English Court of Chancery Appeals, In re Pickering's Claim, L. R. 6 Chan. App. 625. But we think that, upon examination, none of these cases will be found pertinent.

The case of Briggs v. Partridge was not a suit in equity, as counsel for the appellants mistakingly suppose, but a suit at common law, or rather a suit under the code practice of the State of New York, but still essentially a suit at common law, wherein, upon a contract in writing under seal for the sale of some land, the vendor sought to hold the undisclosed principal of the vendee, who was in fact only an agent, for the stipulated purchase money. The contract was executory, and the vendor was ready to execute it, but the vendee and his principal refused. It was held that the suit could not be maintained. Plainly this is no authority in the present case.

In the case of Barcherling v. Katz, 37 N. J. Eq. 156, there was a bond for the payment of money, wherein the nominal obligee was in fact the agent of an undisclosed principal, and the latter sought in a suit in equity to hold the obligor for a breach of the covenant, upon the sole ground that he had no remedy at common law by a suit in his own name; but this was plainly no sufficient ground for recourse to equity. The party had an adequate remedy at common law by a suit in the name of the agent to his own use. And even if he had not, it is no ground for the jurisdiction of equity that a party by his course of conduct may have precluded himself from a suit in his own name. Equity can only grant equitable relief in a case of equitable cognizance, and the mere disability of a party through his own deliberate action to sue at common law does not fall under any known head of equitable jurisprudence.

The case of In re Pickering's Claim, L. R. 6 Chan. App. 625, does not greatly aid the appellant's contention. The report of the case is rather meagre and unsatisfactory; but sufficient appears to show that it has no great bearing upon the present controversy. It may perhaps be described as a case of a common law claim incidentally injected into proceedings in equity. Two brothers had been in partnership and had separated. One of them formed a company for which he was agent; and the company subsequently became insolvent, and its affairs were wound up in the court of chancery. The other brother, in the mean time, had procured a valuable concession from a South American government and sold an interest in it to the brother who had organized the company, for a consideration, part of which was paid in cash at the time and part remained on credit. The sale took the form of an instrument of writing under seal executed by the two brothers as obligor and obligee, without any reference whatever to the company, although the obligor was in fact acting as agent for the company in the transaction. Upon the insolvency of the company the obligee sought to prove his brother's liability to him as a claim against the company. It was held that it could not be allowed. The liability was one at common law between the obligor and the obligee, who both acted in full knowledge of the situation; and the rule of the common law in regard to the enforcement of the claim was not changed by the fact that the affairs of the company had come into the control of a court of equity for the purpose of being wound up and settled. Moreover, the case does not hold that, if it had been shown that the company had recived the benefit of the transaction, it could not have been held, at least to the extent of the benefit. In other words, while there was a suit pending in equity, the claim presented was merely a claim at common law upon the bond. An analogous case would have presented here if the building association had sought to hold the complainant personally upon the bond given by Montgomery.

We are of opinion that the appellee was entitled to institute and maintain this suit, and that he is entitled to the relief which he prays if the proofs justify his allegations.

2. The principal question argued before us is the alleged usurious character of the transaction between Montgomery and the building association, by reason of which, it is alleged, the bond was rendered void which was secured by the deed of trust. But while it is true that the device of premiums, so-called, which was used in this case, has often been employed by the astute managers of building associations to cloak usurious transactions, and the courts have not hesitated, and our own court, among others, has not hesitated to declare these transactions void whenever it is shown that the device was, in fact, a scheme to evade the usury laws, yet we do not find that on its face the transaction here involved was a usurious transaction, and there is not sufficient evidence in the record to show that it was in fact of that character. The transactions of building associations, so called, can be carried on without usury, and it does not in all cases necessarily follow that the law against usury is violated if a larger sum is reserved to be paid for a loan or for an advance, whichever it may be called, than the principal and interest of the amount advanced. In the case of Spain v. Hamilton, 1 Wall. 604, and Bedford v. Building Association, 181 U. S. 227, it was held by the Supreme Court of the United States that when the promise to pay a sum above legal interest depends upon a contingency, and not upon any happening of a certain event, the loan is not usurious. Here the satisfaction of the loan would seem to have been made to depend upon a contingency, for the agreement would seem to have been that the bond should be regarded as satisfied whenever the stock in the name of Montgomery should by payments by the holder and profits accruing from the operations of the association become of the full value of $200 a share; and these profits, of course, were contingent.

But, as we have said, we need not determine this question, and we are not sure that there is sufficient evidence in the record to enable us to determine it. Nor does there appear to be any evidence upon which we would be enabled to determine the value of the so-called stock at any specified point of time. There are statements that at certain dates it was worth a certain sum, but there is no means of verifying the accuracy of these statements. We think that the case can be decided upon a different ground.

Section 33 of the by-laws of the association, to which reference has already been had, provides that when shares of stock in a series shall each have reached the full value of $200 a share, or whenever loans to the full amount of every share of stock shall have been made, the shares shall all be paid off and the series shall be dissolved. Now it is averred in the answer of the defendants that "all the non-borrowing stockholders in the ninth series," as well as in several other series, "have been paid off in full," and it is conceded in the statement annexed to the stipulation and made part of it, that Montgomery, with his eleven shares of stock, is the only remaining stockholder in that series. Now the allegation that the non-borrowing stockholders have all been paid off in full necessarily implied, under the circumstances of this case, that their stock had fully matured and had reached the full value of $200 a share. Necessarily, therefore, the time had come under the by-law cited when all the shares should be paid off and the series dissolved. For the dues being the same for all and the profits being proportionately divisible among all, the stock of all must mature at the same time. We can not infer from anything in the record before us that there might be different dates of maturity for different shares of stock. The scheme of the association seems to demand that all the stock shall mature at the same time. Now, if this be so, it is not apparent how the stock of the non-borrowing stockholders could have fully matured and not that of the borrowing stockholders. The dues for both classes are the same and the profits are equally applicable to both classes. The only difference between the two classes is that the non-borrowing class pays at the rate of $1 a month for each share of stock as dues, and the borrowing class, in addition to this payment of $1 a month as dues, pays also $1 a month as interest and 70 cents a month as premium. But this payment of $1.70 for interest and premium goes into the association as profit, not for the benefit of the non-borrowing class alone, but for the equal benefit of all the stockholders, borrowers and non-borrowers alike. Were it otherwise, were this profit of $1.70 a month to go exclusively to the non-borrowing stockholders, we should have to hold that the whole scheme was illegal and the device a bold effort to evade the laws against usury.

The conclusion here indicated seems to be confirmed by the fact, which is apparent on the record and not contested by any one, that, in the period of 125 months, which elapsed between the date of the transaction between Montgomery and the association and July 31, 1903, when the complainant demanded a settlement and ceased his payments, the complainant had paid back to the association, on account of the loan to him, the aggregate sum of $3,712.50, in the way of dues, interest, and premium; or, if we exclude premiums, as being in the nature of a bonus, the sum of $2,750, in the way of dues and interest—in either case considerably more than the $2,200 required to make the shares of stock of the full value set up by the by-laws.

We can not understand how, under the scheme of this association, the shares of one man alone, the only stockholder remaining in the series, can have only reached the value of $170 a share, when all the other stockholders have received their shares in full.

3. If it be assumed, as we think it must here be assumed, that the complainant has overpaid the amount of his loan, whether such overpayment be the result of mistake or of usury in the transaction, it does not follow that he is entitled in this suit to recover back the amount of the overpayment. There is nothing to show that the directors, against whom a personal decree has been rendered, are or were stockholders of the association. There is nothing to show that they have any money of the association in their hands, derived from the transactions of the ninth series of stock, or from any other series, or from any other source. But apart from all this, it is very clear to us that the complainant is estopped from recovering the amount of his overpayment, at all events in this suit. He is bound by the by-laws of the association of which he became a member. He is bound by the statements of the condition of the association which were made from time to time and to which he gave his tacit assent. Under these by-laws and in pursuance of these statements, the money paid into the association by him went to enhance the value of the stock of his associates and himself and was in great part paid out to his associates when they were settled with and withdrew from the association. Plainly, therefore, it would be inequitable to hold the association as now constituted for money which was paid out to other persons with the knowledge and consent of the complainant.

It is our opinion that while the complainant is entitled to have his property relieved from the deed of trust and to have the bond given by Montgomery and the stock issued to him cancelled, he is not here entitled to have a repayment to him of the money which he claims to have overpaid, if any such overpayment there was, and that the decree appealed from should be modified to that extent. So modified, that decree will be affirmed.

The cause will be remanded to the Supreme Court of the District with directions to modify the decree rendered in the cause, in accordance with the opinion of this court, and for further proceedings therein according to law, if any such further proceedings are required in the premises, the costs of this court to be paid one-half by the appellants and one-half by the appellees.

Modified and affirmed as modified.

CECILIA M. COUGHLIN, PLAINTIFF IN ERROR,

v.

THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

SIDEWALKS; REGULATION FOR REMOVAL OF SNOW AND ICE THEREFROM IVALID.

The regulation promulgated by the Commissioners of the District on February 8, 1905, for the removal of snow and ice from the paved sidewalks of the District within what are called the fire limits, is void as being an illegal exercise of authority and unwarranted by any power conferred by Congress upon the Commissioners.

No. 1579. Decided March 21, 1905.

IN ERROR to the Police Court of the District of Columbia. Reversed.

Mr. Geo. E. Hamilton and Mr. M. J. Colbert for the plaintiff in error.

Mr. A. B. Duvall and Mr. F. H. Stephens for the defendant in error.

Mr. Justice MORRIS delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is understood to be a test case to determine the validity of a certain regulation made and promulgated by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia on February 8, 1905, for the removal of snow and ice from the paved sidewalks of the District within what are called the fire limits. The regulation is in the following words:

"The tenant or occupant of any building or lot of land, or in case there shall be no tenant or occupant, the owner of any building or lot of land fronting or abutting on any paved sidewalk within the fire limits of the District of Columbia, and in the case of any building or lot of land owned by any corporation, joint stock company, or syndicate, the superintendent, manager, or other person in charge or control of such building or lot of land, shall within the first four hours of daylight, after the ceasing to fall of any snow, cause the same to be removed from such sidewalk; and in case ice has formed upon such sidewalk, the tenant, occupant, owner, superintendent, manager, or other person in charge or control of such building or lot of land, as above set forth, shall, within the first four hours of daylight after the same has formed, cause the same to be sprinkled with ashes or some other suitable substance.

"Any violation of any of the provisions of this regulation shall subject the person so offending to a fine of not more than $5, or, in the default of the payment of such fine, to imprisonment in the workhouse of the District of Columbia for not more than five days."

The plaintiff in error is the owner of some vacant and unimproved lots in square 735, in the city of Washington, fronting on Second street southeast; and after a fall of snow on February 9, 1905, failed to remove such snow from the paved sidewalks in front of said lots, within the first four hours of daylight ensuing thereafter. For this failure she was arraigned in the Police Court, and adjudged to be guilty, and a fine of $5 was imposed. A writ of error has been sued out from this court to review the judgment.

The regulation cited is stated to have been copied from an an old municipal ordinance of the city of Washington; and authority for its resurrection and re-enactment by the Commissioners of the District is claimed to be found in the act of Congress of January 26, 1887, (24 Stat. 368), and in the joint resolution of Congress of February 26, 1892, (27 Stat. 394). But no such authority can reasonably be claimed under the act of 1887, which is specifically restricted to eleven distinct subjects of regulation, of which the removal of snow and ice from the streets of the District is not one. They have reference mainly to the orderly use of the streets by vehicles, droves of animals, or animals running at large, to the charges to be made by hackney carriages, and to the use and storage of inflammable materials. They look mainly to the maintenance of order on the public streets, and to the enactment of regulations, in the strictest sense of that word; and not to the imposition of any duty upon individual citizens.

The joint resolution of 1892 is considerably broader in its scope; and under it we have held as valid various regulations promulgated by the Commissioners. But it is very clear that even under this broad grant of authority, which empowers the Commissioners to make all such reasonable and usual police regulations, in addition to those already made under the act of 1887, as they might deem necessary for the protection of lives, limbs, health, comfort, and quiet of all persons and the protection of all property within the District of Columbia, it is regulation, not legislation, that is authorized; the reasonable regulation of the exercise of right, not the imposition of a duty; the usual police regulation for the maintenance of public order, not the levying of a tax either in the way of enforced labor or in the way of the purchase of materials for sprinkling the sidewalks. Whatever power the legislature itself may have in the premises, certainly it is not to be presumed to have granted such plenary authority as is here claimed under the joint resolution of 1892.

That various municipalities may have exercised such power, as appears from various municipal ordinances collated in the brief on behalf of the appellee, is not to the point. Municipalities are usually vested with quasi-legislative powers, among them the sovereign power of taxation and assessment, and from the fact that municipal ordinances are elsewhere to be found analogous to the so-called regulation here in question, it is not to be inferred that similar powers exist in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The Commissioners are not the municipality, but only the executive organs of it, and Congress has reserved to itself not only the power of legislation in the strict sense of the term, which it can not constitutionally delegate to anyone or to any body of men, but even the power of enacting municipal ordinances, such as are within the ordinary scope of the authority of incorporated municipalities. It has delegated to the Commissioners simply the power of making "police regulations" and only such police regulations as are usual and commonly known by that designation.

That Congress has not conferred upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the authority to require of owners and occupants of property in the District the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks in front of their premises is very plain, not only from the absence of any such grant of authority from the statute book, but still more clearly from the fact that subsequently to the enactment of the joint resolution of 1892 it expressly legislated itself on this precise subject on at least three several occasions. And we are warranted by the well-known usage of committees of Congress in this regard in the statement that the legislation was by the procurement of the Commissioners, and with the knowledge of their own incapacity to enact such legislation under the guise and pretense of regulation.

"An act for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks, crosswalks, and gutters in the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and for other purposes" (28 Stat. 809), was passed by Congress on March 2, 1895, by which it was sought to deal with the whole subject-matter. It provided that owners or occupants of private property should remove the snow and ice from the sidewalks in front of their premises; that the Commissioners of the District should remove such deposit from the crosswalks, that is, from the crossing places of the streets and alleys, and from the gutters, and that the superintendent of public buildings and grounds, if he had any money in his hands for the purpose, should clear the sidewalks adjacent to the public parks from ice and snow. There is no provision in the act for the removal of the deposit from the sidewalks adjacent to the public buildings, and there seems to have been no very serious attempt on the part of the public authorities, either national or municipal, to comply with the requirements of the act.

The act of 1895 appears to have been deemed insufficient; and again, no doubt at the instance of the Commissioners, Congress legislated on the subject, and passed the act of March 2, 1897 (29 Stat. 608), which was substantially no more than a re-enactment of the act of 1895, with the omission of the section in regard to the superintendent of public buildings and grounds—for what reason does not appear—and with the addition of "agents" to owners and occupants of land, apparently with the intention of reaching the cases, rather numerous in this city, where property is owned by non-residents. This latter act, which substantially covered the same ground as the act of 1895, with the exception of the provision relating to the superintendent of public buildings and grounds, did not in terms purport to repeal the previous act. It was the act of 1897 that was before us in the Holtzman case (19 D. C. App. 454), in which we held, as to the special feature that differentiated it from the act of 1895, that it was null and void, and at the same time pointed out various crudities, inconsistencies, and inequalities that tended to discredit it in its entirety.

Presumably to cure the defects thus pointed out, Congress again legislated on the subject, and by an act of February 10, 1904 (33 Stat.), most elaborate in its details, sought to remove some of the most objectionable features ofthe act of 1897, and to reach the owners of unimproved property, as well as the owners and occupants of improved property. It expressly repealed the act of 1897, but made no refeernce to the act of 1895, and it was curiously remarkable for its omission of the provision in the acts of 1895 and 1897, whereby the Commissioners were required to remove the snow and ice from the sidewalks and gutters. Thus progressively were eliminated, first, the provision requiring in a limited and effective manner the superintendent of the public buildings and grounds to remove the snow and ice from the sidewalks adjoining the public parks, and secondly, the provision requiring the Commissioners to remove the snow and ice from the crossways and gutters, while the individual citizen was sought to be coerced by heavier penalties to do the same thing with reference to his own property.

This act of 1904 was before us in the case of McGuire v. D. C., 24 D. C. App. ; and we held it to be, if possible, more objectionable than the act of 1897, and with the exception of the section which repealed the act of 1897, to be wholly null and void.

These repeated attempts at legislation, however ineffectual in their result, are sufficient to show that Congress reserved this subject for itself and did not confer upon the Commissioners the power to regulate it.

The decision in the McGuire case was rendered on May 24, 1904, and there was ample opportunity for application to Congress for legislation that would be free from objection. But the third and last session of the Fifty-eighth Congress was permitted to come and go, so far as we are advised, without any effort whatever on the part of the District authorities to provide any such legislation. At all events, there has been no such legislation. Instead of an application to Congress there has been this ill-advised resurrection of an old municipal ordinance, and the promulgation of it by the Commissioners as a regulation of their own, intended to effect what three several acts of Congress had failed to effect. We can not but regard it as a plain usurpation of the powers of Congress.

Congress has imposed upon the municipal authorities of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the duty of caring for the streets, avenues, and alleys, and the highways of the District, and of keeping them free from obstructions; and this duty extends to the sidewalks, as well as to the carriageways. In this regard there is no distinction whatever between the two. Whatever be the cause of such obstructions, whether they be caused by the elements, or purposely or negligently by human instrumentality, the duty is still incumbent on the municipality of removing them at the earliest practicable moment. We presume that if the sidewalks were washed away by an extraordinary downfall of rain, or were sunk through some subsidence of the earth, it would be the duty of the municipality to repair the defect with the least possible delay. If stones or earth or gravel were thrown upon the sidewalk by a careless or inconsiderate person, it would be the duty of the municipality to remove such obstructions or cause them to be removed by the person who caused them. In no one of these cases could the municipality evade the performance of its own plain duty by requiring an adjacent owner of property to perform it. This is an elementary proposition which no one can seriously dispute. Is it different when an obstruction of the highway occurs through the accumulation of snow and ice on the traveled highways of the District? It is true that this obstruction differs from the others than have been mentioned in its magnitude and wide extent, in the comparative frequency of its occurrence, and the palpable necessity for its speedy removal. But these are circumstances that do not affect the liability of the municipality, if the liability has been imposed upon it, but only grounds for the consideration of the law-making power when it comes to deal with the subject. The accumulation of snow and ice is as much of an obstruction on the public highways as is a washout or a sinking of the earth, and in the absence of congressional legislation the municipality can not relieve itself from its duty with reference to the one any more than from its duty with reference to the other. That Congress may so relieve it, if it thinks proper, must of course be conceded, and we have never held that, by a just and equal law, adequate to the purpose, it may not impose that duty upon individual citizens. At the instance of the Commissioners, it has been sought so to relieve the municipality to a certain extent from that duty by the acts of Congress that have been cited. But if those acts have failed fully to accomplish the purpose, it does not follow that the Commissioners may take the law into their own hands and by an illegal ordinance attempt to shift the burden.

We are of opinion that as the law now stands Congress alone, and not the Commissioners, have the authority to regulate the removal of snow and ice from the paved sidewalks, crossings, and other traveled spaces of the public highways of the District; that, as the law now stands, the duty is upon the municipality itself to cause such removal; and that it is not competent for the Commissioners by any regulation whatever which they may adopt to remove that burden from themselves as the responsible agents of the municipality and impose it upon individual citizens.

We are of opinion that the regulation, under which the plaintiff in error was prosecuted in the Police Court, is an illegal exercise of authority and unwarranted by any power conferred by Congress upon the Commissioners. Several inherent defects have been pointed out in it; but these it is unnecessary to consider, since the whole regulation must fail for want of authority to make it.

The judgment of the Police Court in the premises will be reversed, with costs; and the cause will be remanded to that court with directions to vacate such judgment and to discharge the defendant. And it is so ordered.

Death of Mr. Joseph Shillington.

In the death of Mr. Joseph Shillington, which occurred at his home in this city on Tuesday morning, June 13, the bar of the District has lost one of its best known and most popular members. For some time past it has been known that he was suffering with tuberculosis, and in the heroic struggle he made against that dread disease he had the fullest sympathy of a wide circle of friends, including among that number practically the entire membership of the bar.

Mr. Shillington was a native of this District, and his professional life, embracing nearly twenty years, was spent here. His success at the bar began with his admission to practice, and very shortly thereafter he was made an assistant to United States Attorney Hoge, leaving that position to accept one in the office of the attorney for the District of Columbia, under Mr. A. G. Riddle. During the incumbency by Mr. Henry E. Davis of the position of United States Attorney, Mr. Shillington was one of his most valued and capable assistants.

Mr. Shillington, while not confining his practice to criminal cases, was recognized as among the leaders of the bar in that class of practice. His knowledge of the law was thorough, and he was an orator of exceptional ability. By his high character, professional and private, he commanded the respect and esteem of both bench and bar, and his untimely death is the occasion of sincere regret.

District Code—Provisions as to Limitation of Actions—None Applicable to Foreign Judgments.

An interesting question involving a construction of sections 1212, 1213, 1265, and 1267 of the Code was decided by Chief Justice Clabaugh on Friday, June 9, in sustaining plaintiff's demurrer to two pleas of the Statute of Limitations in the case of John C. Bradley to the use of the Guarantee Trust and Safe Deposit Company of Philadelphia v. Mabel Grace McKay and Henry F. Woodard, executrix and executor of the will of Nathaniel McKay, deceased, Law No. 47,633.

Plaintiff brought suit upon a judgment for $2,585.15, rendered against Nathaniel McKay in 1889 in the Supreme Court of the State of New York and amounting at the present time, with interest, to over $5,000. Defendants filed three pleas, nul tiel record, Statute of Limitations of three years, and Statute of Limitations of twelve years. To the two pleas of the Statute of Limitations the plaintiff demurred. At the hearing, on May 19, it was contended by Mr. Fulton Lewis, attorney for the plaintiff, that section 1267 of the Code contained the only provisions respecting limitation of actions on foreign judgments; that its effect was, in an action on a foreign judgment, to import the Statute of Limitations applicable to the judgment in the State or country where the same was rendered, and to make the same the law of this jurisdiction for the purposes of the suit, and that if section 1267 had no such effect, then there is in this District no Statute of Limitations applicable to foreign judgments, as sections 1212 and 1213 relate specifically to domestic judgments, and the language of the general three-year limitation in section 1265, when read in the light of the repealed part of section 1267, could not be held to apply to foreign judgments. Defendants' attorneys insisted that the general three-year limitation is broad enough to cover actions on foreign judgments; that the effect of section 1267 is confined to those cases where the judgment is barred at its home in less than three years; that section 1267 is not a statute of limitation, but is simply a provision relating to barred judgments, and that it should not be given any weight in determining the question before the court.

Chief Justice Clabaugh in disposing of the case, said he was inclined to think that section 1267 as it now stands is not to be regarded as a statute of limitation. Such being the case, it was necessary to consider whether there is any other section of the Code which does provide a limitation of actions on foreign judgments. He said that the limitation provided in sections

1212 and 1213 could not apply to foreign judgments because it was specifically confined to domestic judgments, and the only other section of the Code which could contain a limitation applicable to foreign judgments was section 1265. That section, after prescribing limitations for various causes of action, enacts the following: "And no action the limitation of which is not otherwise specifically prescribed in this section shall be brought after three years from the time when the right to maintain such action shall have accrued." The question was whether this language should be held to apply to foreign judgments. The chief justice said that if it be held so to apply, then a creditor holding a sealed obligation would actually suffer a disadvantage as a result of reducing his claim to judgment in another jurisdiction. By the prior provisions of this same section he would be allowed twelve years in which to sue in this District upon the sealed instrument, whereas if he reduced his claim to judgment in another jurisdiction, it would be barred in three years. He said that while there was no doubt of the power of Congress to enact such inconsistency, if it saw fit, the absurdity of such a condition of things was, in a case where the meaning of the legislature was in doubt, a very strong argument against adopting a construction which would lead to such results.

Moreover, the chief justice said the authorities hold that notwithstanding the fact that part of a statute has been repealed, the repealed part may be taken into consideration in construing what remains. Section 1267, when the Code went into effect, contained the following in addition to what now remains: "And whether so barred or not, no action shall be brought in the District on any such judgment or decree rendered more than ten years before the commencement of such action." The existence of this clause at the time this Code was enacted showed plainly that Congress did not intend the three limitations to apply to foreign judgments.

But apart from these considerations and taking the language of section 1265 by itself, the chief justice was of the opinion that the general three-year limitation invoked by defendants could not apply to foreign judgments, but referred to causes of action in the nature of contracts, and in support of his views the chief justice quoted from the opinion of Justice McLean in Todd v. Crumb, 5 McLean, 173, where it was held that similar language in the Ohio Statute of Limitations did not apply to a judgment of a sister State, and that such a judgment was not a specialty in the legal sense of the term and hence not barred by the limitation provided in the case of specialties. Chief Justice Clabaugh, approving the reasoning of the learned justice in the case quoted from, concluded that none of the provisions of our Code relative to limitation of actions are applicable to foreign judgments, and that, as the Code has repealed the Maryland law on that subject formerly in force here, there is now no limitation whatever applicable to actions on foreign judgments in this District, but the same if not barred in the jurisdiction where they were rendered, may be sued upon at any time here subject only to the effect of the common law presumption of payment after the lapse of twenty years. The plaintiff's demurrer was therefore sustained.

In the foregoing case plaintiffs were represented by Mr. Fulton Lewis, and the defendants by Messrs. Birney & Woodard and Worthington, Heald & Frailey.

Automobile—Accident—Liability.

The Supreme Court of Indiana held, in the case of The Indiana Springs Company et al. v. Brown, that in the exercise of his right to operate an automobile on the public highways, a person is bound to take into account the tendency of its appearance, sound, and velocity to frighten horses that are not used to such machines, and to exercise his rights on the highway with due regard to the rights of other travelers driving horses thereon, and that an autoist who sees that a horse is evidently frightened by his rapid approach and takes no measures to avert the threatened injury from that cause, is liable to persons driving such horse for injuries proximately caused by its fright, which could have been averted after observing its fright by stopping the automobile or slacking its speed momentarily.

Railroad—Accident—Shipper's Pass.

A person while traveling on a freight train on a stock shipper's pass for the purpose of attending to the live stock being shipped sustains the relation of passenger to the carrier, but in a restricted and modified sense, according to the decision of the Supreme Court of Nebraska in the case of The Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy Railroad Company v. Troyer. In this case the appellee was injured while traveling on a stock shipper's pass. The court held that the question of the alleged negligence of the company was one for the jury to determine.

Contracts—Tender After Action Brought.—Where plaintiff alleged performance, and damages by defendant's neglect in performing his part of the contract, he can not recover on proof of part performance and inability to perform by defendant's default. Young v. Stickney (Oreg.), 79 Pac. Rep. 345.

Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

LILLIAN S. BUTLER, APPELLANT,
v.
JOHN D. FRAZEE.

MASTER AND SERVANT; UNSAFE APPLIANCES; NOTICE BY SERVANT OF DEFECT; ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

1. It is the duty of the employer to provide suitable and reasonably safe machinery and appliances for the use of his employee, and this duty can not be avoided by entrusting its performance to some other employee; but there is no guaranty by the master that the machinery and appliances provided are absolutely safe.
2. When an injury is received by an employee while working with machinery or appliances provided for his use, the fact of accident carries with it no presumption of neglect of duty on the part of the employer, and the burden is upon the employee to show such negligence as an affirmative fact.
3. Where an employee undertakes and continues the use of defective and unsafe appliances, either with actual notice of such defect, or where the same is open to ordinary observation in the usual course of its use, he must be deemed to have accepted the risk of all danger reasonably to be apprehended from such use, and can not recover of his employer.
4. In an action for injury received by plaintiff while engaged in feeding a mangle in a steam laundry, the negligence of defendant was alleged to consist in that the finger guard on the mangle was improperly adjusted. It appeared plaintiff was 22 years of age and had about two years' experience in operating mangles in other laundries, and had been operating the one at which she was injured for more than two months prior to the accident. The space left in the adjustment of the finger guard, which it was alleged was too great, was plainly visible. Held, that she was not entitled to recover, and the trial court properly directed a verdict for defendant.

No. 1485. Decided April 17, 1905.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, at Law, No. 45,829, entered upon a verdict directed by the court in an action for personal injuries.

Mr. J. C. Gittings and Mr. J. Morrill Chamberlain for the appellant.

Mr. C. A. Keigwin and Mr. L. J. Mather, Jr., for the appellee.

Mr. Chief Justice SHEPARD delivered the opinion of the Court:

This action was brought by the appellant as plaintiff in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to recover damages occasioned by the negligence of her employer, the appellee.

The bill of exceptions recites that the plaintiff offered evidence tending to show:

That the defendant is and in the year 1902, was, the owner of a steam laundry in the city of Washington, in which laundry was used a machine for drying and ironing clothes called a mangle. Said mangle consisted essentially of a steel cylinder four feet in diameter and eight feet long, which was heated by steam under a pressure of eighty pounds to the square inch, and was made to revolve in such a way that the surface next to the operator moved upward and away from her. Resting upon the upper half of the surface of the said cylinder were five rollers, which were held in place by attachments to the stationary frame of the machine, and which revolved in a direction opposite to that of the cylinder, the said rollers being set each at a distance of about six inches from the next. The purpose of the mangle was to iron and dry the clothes by carrying them over the surface of the cylinder and under the rollers, and it was the duty of the operators feeding the machine to introduce the edge of the article to be ironed between the cylinder and the first roller. For this purpose two operators were necessary, one standing at each side of the mangle and directly in front of the steam cylinder. A part of the machine intended to facilitate the feeding thereof, was a board, called the feed board, which was attached to the frame of the mangle and extended across the machine, just in front of which the operator stood. This feed board was eight feet long, extended from side to side of the mangle, was twelve to fifteen inches wide, two and a half inches thick, and weighed about sixty pounds. The inner edge of the feed board was beveled, so as to fit closely to the surface of the cylinder, and the feed board was so fixed in place by bolts that the inner edge was as close to the cylinder as it could be without causing friction.

It was the duty of the operators feeding the mangle to spread the article to be ironed while damp but having been smoothed out by the hands upon the surface of the feed board, and to gradually push the same across the said board in such a manner that the inner edge of the article should touch the surface of the cylinder, and being carried upward thereby, should be engaged by the first of the rollers, and so be drawn in between the cylinder and the rollers. To this end it was necessary for the operators to place the palms of their hands flat upon the article to be ironed, so as to produce sufficient pressure for the purpose.

The first roller was about four inches above the feed board. For the safety of the operators the machine was equipped with a safety apparatus called a finger-guard. This was a bar of steel, eight feet long, three inches wide, and one-eighth of an inch thick, fixed to the frame of the machine and extending horizontally from side to side thereof, in front of the cylinder and about four inches distant from its revolving surface. Said guard was adjustable within certain limits and might be set at a height above the feed board for one-quarter of an inch to four inches. In the mangle used by the defendant, the guard had been originally adjusted at a height of one and one-half inches above the feed board and had always been in that position and was so at the time of the accident hereinafter mentioned.

The plaintiff entered the employ of the defendant in the month of May, 1902, and in October of that year was assigned to the duty of assisting in feeding the mangle hereinbefore described. She was about 22 years of age and had had about two years' experience in the operation of mangles in other laundries; that all the mangles she had operated were equipped with safety devices or finger guards which prevented the operators' hands from coming into contact with the steam cylinder; that during her entire experience in the defendant's and other laundries she had never known or heard of anyone being injured while feeding a mangle by reason of their hands coming into contact with the steam cylinder of a mangle equipped with the safety device or finger guard rail; that prior to beginning to operate defendant's mangle, plaintiff saw that same was equipped with a finger guard rail; that she had never been warned by anyone that said mangle was more dangerous than any of the other machines she had previously operated, nor that the guard rail was improperly adjusted, in that it was too high and would permit of her hands being drawn under same and coming into contact with the cylinder, nor was there anything about the machine to lead her to believe that it was any more dangerous than any other mangle she had operated; that prior to the accident plaintiff did not know, nor had she been warned, nor had she any reason to suppose that the finger guard rail had been adjusted so high that it would permit of her hands being drawn under it into the machine; she did not know just how far the finger guard rail was placed from the cylinder. From the position in which she stood in feeding the machine she could not see the point where the first roller came in contact with the steam cylinder, her view being obstructed by the finger guard rail; that her hands had never been brought into contact with the steam cylinder before, nor had her hands ever been carried under the guard rail previous to the injury.

The plaintiff gave evidence tending to show that her duty consisted in feeding the linen to the machine while standing on the left hand side of same; that the feed board next to the cylinder on the left hand side was loose and worn; that such was its condition when plaintiff first began to operate it in October, 1902, and so remained up to the time of the injury; that this defect permitted the linen while being fed into the machine to catch on the right hand side, while at times falling or dropping between the edge of the feed board and the steam cylinder on the plaintiff's side.

The plaintiff from the time aforesaid in October, when she was assigned to feeding the said mangle, until the 28th day of the following December, was continually and daily employed upon the said machine. During this period she did not report any defect in the construction, adjustment, or repair of the machine, nor did she make any complaint of its condition or request any alterations to be made.

On the 28th day of December, 1902, in the morning, the plaintiff was engaged in feeding the said mangle, standing on the left hand side as she had been accustomed, and another young woman was feeding at the right hand side thereof. While so engaged, the left hand of the plaintiff was in some manner carried between the cylinder and the first roller and so injured that amputation thereof became necessary. The manner of the said accident was thus stated in the testimony of the plaintiff herself:

A. "Why, the morning of the accident nearly every piece we put in the mangle, Miss Cumberland's end would go in before mine and I would have to push, and my hand caught on. . . . A. The morning of the accident nearly every piece would catch on Sydney's side before it would catch on mine; and the table cloth would take my hand right on up with it. It dropped down between the board and the cylinder, and when it caught, it carried my hand right on up with it. . . . A. Well, the linen would drop down between the board and the cylinder and you had to push it up. Q. Do you mean us to understand that you put your hand deliberately inside this finger guard and down into the space between the feed board and the cylinder? A. No, sir. Q. How did the linen drop? A. The linen instead of going in would drop down between the board and the cylinder and you would push it up, and the young lady working on the other side, hers would catch before mine. Q. You had to get hold of the end in some way to push it up? No, sir; you had to push it up the feed board. Q. If the edge of the linen you were feeding had dropped down between the feed board and the cylinder, how could you push it up? A. You could push it up and it would come down wrinkled. Q. If it had dropped down between the feed board and the cylinder, how could you push it up? A. It dropped down between the feed board and the cylinder, and when you pushed it up and it came out of the mangle it would come out wrinkled. Q. You did not hold the table cloth as it fed into the machine? A. Yes, I had hold of the table cloth. Q. You pushed the table cloth over the feed board; but you could not catch hold of it, as a matter of fact? A. I had hold of the table cloth and was pushing it up and it dropped. And this day it was worse; every piece we put in it dropped down and we had to push it up; and as I pushed it up in some way or other it took my hand with it. Q. You say it was getting worse? A. Yes. We had to sprinkle the clothes every day, and this day we had to sprinkle the clothes more than ever. Q. And that is the only day you put your hand inside the finger guard? A. Yes. Q. Why did you put your hand inside then? A. I didn't put my hand inside. The table cloth pulled it in. My hand was on the table cloth pushing it up, and the table cloth caught and it caught my hand with it. Q. On this particular occasion even you didn't push your hand inside the finger guard? A. No, sir; I didn't put my hand under the finger guard until the table cloth pulled it under. Q. So the table cloth had hold of your hand before your hand had gotten past the finger guard? A. The table cloth dropped and I gave it another push to make it catch and after it dropped it caught it on the cylinder and carried my hand right with it. Q. So that your hand had gone past the finger guard before the table cloth caught it and carried it into the mangle? A. The table cloth took my hand right along with it. Q. What I want to find out is the exact time that this table cloth became wrapped around your hand in such a way as to take it into that mangle? A. The table cloth dropped. Sydney's end had gone in and my end had dropped, and I pushed it and it caught. As soon as the table cloth—it caught and after it caught in some way it took my hand right up with it. Q. Where did it drop? Between the feed board and the cylinder? A. Between the feed board and the cylinder. Q. And it was not until after it dropped that your hand was caught? A. It dropped between the feed board and the cylinder, and I had my hand on the feed board to make it catch, and my hand caught and went right up with it.

No other evidence was given upon either side as to the cause and manner of the accident, and it did not appear that any other person had observed the position of the plaintiff's hands, or the condition of the cloth before or at the time when her hand went under the finger guard.

The plaintiff offered further evidence tending to show that, upon the occurrence of the accident, the machinery was stopped, the roller lifted, and her hand taken out. It was found that the edge of the table cloth, which was the article in process of mangling when the accident occurred, had been folded back over the fingers and was clasped in the palm of the hand.

The plaintiff offered further evidence of experts in the conduct of laundries and in the operation of laundry machinery to the effect that the sole purpose of the finger guard was to prevent the fingers of the operator from coming in contact with the cylinder and that the same could be so adjusted as to prevent such accident; that there was no kind of laundry work which required an adjustment of the guard at more than half an inch above the feed board; and that an elevation of three-quarters of an inch would lessen its value as a guard.

The defendant offered evidence tending to show that the mangle was of a standard and approved pattern, being considered the best of some half dozen leading "makes." That the machinery of the laundry was under the management and control of an experienced and competent superintendent and a foreman. That a daily inspection was made by the superintendent to see if the machinery was in thorough repair. That the feed board had been securely bolted some weeks before. That the operators were accustomed to pushing the linen with their fingers instead of the palms of their hands, which offered better control of the wet linen and prevented the hands from going under the finger guard. That the finger guard had been adjusted at a height of one and one-half inches when the mangle was installed and had so remained. That this adjustment was best adapted to the work of the laundry, a lower adjustment causing the wrinkled edges of the half dried heavy work to catch the finger guard and turn over. That the finger guard was securely bolted and painted red so as to serve as a warning not to put the hands underneath, and was in full view of the operators. That no complaint had ever been made by plaintiff and no dissatisfaction expressed. That the finger guard was 3 or 4 inches from the cylinder and 6 or 7 inches from the point where the first roller meets the cylinder. That the finger guard was capable of an adjustment of from 1 to 4 inches to suit the various styles and character of the work. That aside from the finger guard the heat of the steam cylinder would indicate danger, and from point of first contact therewith it was 3 or 4 inches to the point where there was friction sufficient to overcome the slightest effort at withdrawal. That from where the operators stood they could see plainly over the rail of the finger guard how far it was to the revolving cylinder which was in plain sight and less than 2 feet distant from where the operators stood.

The only substantial conflict between this evidence and that of the plaintiff is in respect of the capacity of the adjustment of the finger guard. Plaintiff's evidence tended to show that the space of the opening could be reduced to one-fourth of an inch.

The rule of law is well settled that it is the duty of the employer to provide suitable and reasonably safe machinery and appliances for the use of his employee, and that this duty can not be avoided by entrusting its performance to some other employee. Patton v. T. & P. Ry. Co., 179 U. S. 658, 664, and cases cited.

Notwithstanding this duty rests upon the employer, there is no guaranty by him that the machinery and appliances provided are absolutely safe. Patton v. T. & P. Ry. Co., supra; W. & G. Ry. Co. v. McDade, 135 U. S. 554, 570; S. P. Ry. Co. v. Seley, 152 U. S. 145, 153; Asphalt Co. v. Mackey, 15 App. D. C. 410, 423: 28 Wash. Law Rep. 35.

Therefore, when an injury is received by an employee, while working with the machinery or appliances provided for his operation or use, the fact of accident carries with it no presumption of neglect of duty on the part of the employer, as in the case of a passenger; for example, where there is a contract for safe carriage, and the burden rests upon the employee to show such negligence as an affirmative fact. "It is not sufficient for the employee to show that the employer may have been guilty of negligence; the evidence must point to the fact that he was. And where the testimony leaves the matter uncertain and shows that any one of half a dozen things may have brought about the injury, for some of which the employer is responsible and for some of which he is not, it is not for the jury to guess between these half a dozen causes and find that the negligence of the employer was the real cause, when there is no satisfactory foundation in the testimony for that conclusion. If the employee is unable to adduce sufficient evidence to show negligence on the part of the employer, it is only one of the many cases in which the plaintiff fails in his testimony, and no mere sympathy for the unfortunate victim of an accident justifies any departure from settled rules of proof resting upon all plaintiffs." Patton v. T. & P. Ry. Co., 179 U. S. 658, 663.

The testimony of the plaintiff herself, and there was no other as to the immediate cause of the accident, lacks directness and certainty; and one can hardly escape the conclusion that she was not paying sufficient attention at the time to be able to say whether, as a matter of fact, it was due to the unsafe adjustment of the finger guard, or to her own careless handling of the cloth which she was engaged in pushing into contact with the revolving cylinder.

But assuming the soundness of the contention on her behalf, that her hand could not have been carried between the cylinders at all, if the finger guard had been so adjusted as to leave a space not exceeding one-half an inch, of which adjustment it was capable, instead of the actual space of one and one-half inches; and assuming also the truth of the testimony offered on her behalf tending to show that a space not exceeding one-half of an inch was ample for the proper operation of the mangle under all conditions, we are of the opinion that the court was right in directing a verdict for the defendant.

It plainly appears from the testimony of the plaintiff that she was 22 years of age at the time of the accident, and it must be presumed that she was possessed of ordinary intelligence. She had had about two years experience in operating mangles in other laundries before entering the service of the defendant. These, however, had all been equipped with finger guards adjusted so low as to prevent the operators' fingers from coming in contact with the cylinders which engaged each other a few inches beyond. She entered defendant's service in May, 1902, had been assigned to duty as one of the operators of this mangle in October, and sustained the injury December 28 of the same year.

The space left in the adjustment of the finger-guard, assuming it to have been unusual and unnecessary, as well as dangerous, was unhidden and plainly visible. It was immediately under the plaintiff's eyes and in close proximity to her finger ends when she was constantly employed in pushing the cloth which passed under it into engagement with the ironing cylinders. It is inconceivable that this adjustment could have escaped the observation of the plaintiff during more than two months of this constant employment. Under such circumstances she must be presumed to have had knowledge of a condition which would necessarily have become known through the ordinary exercise of her faculties. The defect being obvious to one of plaintiff's intelligence and experience, the defendant was under no duty to instruct her in the performance of her services, or to correct it in the absence of any complaint or request made by her.

The doctrine of law is established beyond question, that where an employee undertakes and continues the use of defective and unsafe appliances, either with actual notice of such defect, or where the same is open to ordinary observation in the usual course of its use, he must be deemed to have accepted the risk of all danger reasonably to be apprehended from such use, and can not recover of his employer. S. P. Co. v. Seley, 152 U. S. 145, 155; W. & G. R. R. v. McDade, 135 U. S. 554, 570; T. & P. Ry. Co. v. Archibald, 170 U. S. 665, 673; Hayzel v. Railway Co., 19 App. D. C. 359, 371: 30 Wash. Law Rep. 198; Crowley v. Pacific Mills, 148 Mass. 228.

In the following cases, all of which were actions for injuries sustained by employees in the operation of mangles, recoveries were denied under the application of this doctrine to facts and circumstances of the same general nature as those shown in the case at bar. Connolly v. Eldridge, 160 Mass. 566, 570; Blow v. Yellowstone Park Asso., 86 Minn. 237, 239; Kennan v. Waters, 181 Pa. St. 247.

For the reasons stated the judgment must be affirmed, with costs; and it is so ordered.

Affirmed.

MATILDA S. VOGT, ETC., APPELLANT,

v.

SOPHIA VOGT ET AL.

WILLS; REMAINDERS; RULE IN SHELLEY'S CASE; INTENTION OF TESTATOR.

1. Where a present interest in remainder, though to be enjoyed in futuro, passes under the will to a certain and definite person, the remainder is a vested one.
2. The rule in Shelley's case will not apply where one of the estates attempted to be created is equitable and the other legal.
3. A trust estate is not to continue beyond the period required for the purposes of the trust.
4. Where a testator directed that at a certain time after his death the residue of his real estate should be sold and the proceeds divided among his heirs, share and share alike, and paid over to them at once, except that the share of one son should be paid to trustees to be invested by them, the income to be paid to the son, the principal to be paid to his heirs after his death, held that the trust being limited to the life of the son, the remainder to his heirs is a legal estate, and therefore the rule in Shelley's case, even if applicable to personal estate, did not apply, and the son took only an equitable estate for life in the income, the legal estate in remainder being vested in his heirs.
5. The tendency of the courts is to deny the application of the rule where the intent of the testator has been made to appear so plainly to the contrary that no one could misunderstand it.
6. Held, that the direction for a sale of the real estate having effected an equitable conversion, and the plain intention of the testator being that the son should have only a life estate in the income, the word "heirs" in the bequest in remainder should be construed as meaning children or next of kin, or those who would take under the statute of distributions, and the rule in Shelley's case is not applicable.

No. 1520. Decided June 13, 1905.

APPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in Equity, No. 23,547, in suit for the construction of a will. Reversed.

Mr. Leon Tobriner for the appellants.

Mr. John C. Gittings for the appellees.

Mr. Chief Justice SHEPARD delivered the opinion of the Court:

The bill in this case was filed by certain of the children of John L. Vogt to obtain a construction of the latter's will, and for some other purposes which it seems have been accomplished by settlement or otherwise and need not be mentioned.

The defendants are Charles Graff and Frederick C. Gieseking, executors and trustees named in said will, and Matilda S. Vogt, the infant daughter of one of the complainants, Frederick H. Vogt.

The testator, John L. Vogt, died seized and possessed of a large estate. After certain specific devises and bequests the following disposition was made of the residue: "All the rest and residue of my real estate shall, when my youngest surviving child attains the age of 21 years, or one year thereafter in the discretion of my executors, be sold by my executors at public auction, after due notice in the newspapers of this city. The proceeds of said sales shall be then divided among my heirs, share and share alike, and paid over to them respectively at once, except the share coming to my son, Fred H. Vogt. Said share shall be paid to Charles Graff and Frederick C. Gieseking, as trustees, by them invested, the income therefrom to be paid said Fred H. Vogt, the principal to be paid to his heirs after his death." The single controversy is over the construction of this provision, and is between Frederick H. Vogt and his infant child, Matilda S. Vogt. The question is whether the former takes the absolute estate, or only the income thereof for life with remainder to his said daughter. The decree of the equity court sustained the contention of the father, and has been appealed from by the daughter.

The contention on behalf of Fred H. Vogt that he took an absolute estate under the residuary clause of the will aforesaid rests on the application to its provisions of the rule in Shelly's case. That famous rule has been defined and elucidated by Chief Justice Alvey, speaking for this court in Sims v. Georgetown College, 1 App. D. C. 72, 79: 21 Wash. Law Rep. 595, in the following words: "Where, in the same instrument, the ancestor takes an estate of freehold, with remainder mediately or immediately to his heirs, the word heirs is a word of limitation of the estate, and not of purchase; or in other words, that such remainder vests in the ancestor himself, and the heirs when they take, take by descent from him, and not as purchasers from the grantor or devisor. Thus, if the limitation be to his heirs in general a fee simple is given to the ancestor; if to the heirs of his body, he takes a fee tail, according to the common law. . . . And the rule is equally applicable to the limitations of equitable as to legal estates; but the estate of the ancestor and the limitation to the heirs must be of the same quality, that is, both must be legal or both equitable. The same words that create an estate in fee simple or an estate in fee tail in legal estates, will, when applied to an equitable estate create an estate in fee simple or in fee tail in that estate." See, also, Green v. Green, 23 Wall. 486, 488; Croxall v. Sherred, 5 Wall. 268, 282.

There can be no doubt that the real intention of the testator was that Fred H. Vogt should take nothing more than a life estate in the designated share; that is, the income thereof during his life, and that the same should then pass into the possession and enjoyment of his children or next of kin; and the question is whether the expression of this intention is so inconsistent with the aforesaid rule as to be completely thwarted thereby? The real estate having been directed to be converted into money is to be regarded as if it were money at the time of the testator's death. Cropley v. Cooper, 19 Wall. 167, 174. Both parties concur in this view.

While the rule in Shelly's case is perhaps a logical result of the ancient doctrine of feudal tenure, and is, therefore, peculiarly applicable in the construction of grants and devises of land, it may be assumed, also, for present purposes, but without expressly so deciding, that it is equally applicable to grants and bequests of personal property. Under the statement of the rule, as we have seen, in order that the two estates attempted to be created shall coalesce, they must be of the same quality; that is, both must be legal or both equitable. If the one be equitable and the other legal the rule will not apply.

The life estate here being equitable, the application turns upon the contention of the appellees that the estate in remainder is likewise an equitable one.

The remainder is a vested one, because a present interest, though to be enjoyed in futuro, passes under the will to a certain and definite person. Poor v. Considine, 6 Wall. 458, 474. In the same case it is said: "It is a rule of law that estates shall be held to vest at the earliest possible period, unless there be a clear manifestation of the intention of the testator to the contrary." And the rule is the same where the subject-matter is personal property. Gibbens v. Gibbens, 140 Mass. 102, 105.

Bearing this in mind, we are of the opinion that the appellees' contention must be denied. The devise or bequest to the trustees was to them without the addition of their heirs, etc., and their active duties were expressly limited to the life of Fred H. Vogt. Had there been no conversion of the devised estate into personalty, the vested remainder would be a legal estate, because the use would be executed in the heirs. Ware v. Richardson, 3 Md. 505; Green v. Green, 23 Wall. 486, 491; Croxall v. Sherred, 5 Wall. 268, 282.

It may be conceded that the Statute of Uses, in force in Maryland and the District of Columbia, does not operate in the case of personal property. But a like result is accomplished by another well-established principle, namely, that a trust estate is not to continue beyond the period required by the purposes of the trust. Poor v. Considine, 6 Wall. 458, 471. As said in that case by Mr. Justice Swayne: "This doctrine rests upon a solid foundation of reason and authority, irrespective of the presence or absence of the Statute of Uses." See also Young v. Bradley, 101 U. S. 782, 787; Potter v. Couch, 141 U. S. 296, 309; Wilkes v. Wilkes, 18 App. D. C. 90, 96: 29 Wash. Law Rep. 261; Smith v. Sullivan, 20 App. D. C. 553, 557: 31 Wash. Law Rep. 2; Long v. Long, 62 Md. 33, 64, 66. In the case last cited it was said by Chief Justice Alvey, who delivered the opinion of the court: "And in regard to personalty, the principle is, that when a trust has been created, and all purposes of the trust have ceased, or at an end, the absolute estate is in the person entitled to the last use, unless there is an apparent intention to the contrary." See, also, Denton v. Denton, 17 Md. 407; Owen v. Crow, 62 Md. 491, 494; Hooper v. Falgner, 80 Md. 262, 272; Mercer v. Safe Dep. Co., 91 Md. 102, 117; Bacon's Appeal, 57 Pa. St. 504, 514.

Instead of there being "an apparent intention to the contrary" in this case, the testator expressly limited the trust to the life estate. No exercise of discretion is required of the trustees thereafter; they are not even required to make partition. Their active duties cease with the life of Fred H. Vogt. The trust is ended thereby, and all that they are required to do is to pay over the principal at once.

The trust being expressly limited to the life estate of Fred H. Vogt, the remainder to the heirs is a legal estate, and hence there can be no union of the two estates under the rule in Shelly's case.

Bacon's appeal, supra, is directly in point. Both real and personal property were vested in trustees by the will, the income thereof payable to a daughter during life, if she died leaving a husband income to him for life, and from and after the decease of the daughter and her husband, respectively, her share to "go to her right heirs forever." It was held that the life estate being equitable and the remainder legal, there was no merger.

Mr. Justice Strong, delivering the opinion of the court, said: "The cestui que trust being entitled to the whole beneficial enjoyment, and the trustees having no right to interfere with it, no reason is apparent why a legal title should be held continuing in the latter. A severance of the legal right from the beneficial ownership is not to be maintained without some reason. In the case before us the purpose of the trust was accomplished when Mrs. Bacon died. The testator did not intend that the trustees should hold any estate after her death. He contemplated its immediate transmission to the remaindermen, a transmission by conveyance, indeed, but no holding in trust for those in remainder. There was, therefore, nothing substantial to be secured by treating the legal estate as remaining in the trustees, and only an equitable interest in Mrs. Bacon's heirs. . . . The direction to the trustees to convey after the termination of the trust does not continue the legal title in them and make them trustees of the persons to whom they are directed to convey." The foregoing had application to the real estate, but it was also said that the same rule applied in the case of the personal property under the same trust. To the same effect, Mannerback's Estate, 133 Pa. St. 342, 350.

Thus far we have dealt with the case upon the lines chiefly pursued in the argument before us. But we think that the decision can be rested upon another ground, the consumption of space in the statement of which is justified by the importance of the case.

The subject-matter involved is personal property, and as we have before said the rule in Shelly's case is peculiarly applicable to grants and devises of real estate. Daniel V. Wharteney, 17 Wall. 639, 642; 4 Kent. 216. Assuming that it also applies to personal property, yet the courts, guided by the cardinal principle that the intention of the testator shall govern where possible, have always been more anxious to support limitations of personal property than of realty. Bacon's Appeal, 57 Pa. St. 504, 514.

As has been said before, no one can doubt what the real intention of the testator was in making this will. Now, while the intention will be unavailing, especially in the case of real property, to exclude the application of the rule where the technical language used is directly within its application, still, "if there are explanatory and qualifying expressions, from which it appears that the import of the technical language is contrary to the clear and plain intent of the testator, the former must yield, and the latter must prevail. The rule is one of property and not of construction." Daniel v. Wharteney, 17 Wall. 639, 643. The tendency has always been, and is now more marked than ever, to deny the application of the rule "where the intent of the testator has been made to appear so plainly to the contrary that no one could misunderstand it." Poole v. Poole, 3 Bos. & Pul. 627; Featherston v. Featherston, 3 Cl. & Fin. 67, cases cited and quoted from in Sims v. Georgetown College, 1 App. D. C. p. 81. The word share as used in the clause under consideration is a mere designation of the ratio of division in order to make the same certain. The shares, in that sense, of the remaining children are to be divided among and paid over to them immediately upon the actual conversion of the lands into money; while in the case of Fred H. Vogt, not the share but the income thereof only is to be paid to him during his life. The share is never to come into his possession at all. In directing the principal to be paid over after the death of Fred H. Vogt, had the testator used the appropriate words, children, or next of kin, or the like, instead of heirs, this controversy might have been avoided. Most likely, the testator had no apprehension of the conversion worked by his positive direction to sell the real estate; and had there been no conversion, the word "heirs," commonly understood by persons, like him unlearned in the law, as meaning those who take both real and personal estate in case of intestacy, would be the appropriate one. In that event, as we have seen, the use would have been executed in the heirs, and their estate in remainder would be a legal one which would not coalesce with the equitable life estate. As there was an equitable conversion, however, and in view of the plain intention of the testator, we are of the opinion that the word "heirs" must be construed as meaning children or next of kin, or those who would take as distributees under the statute. "When the word heir is used in gifts of personalty it should primarily be held to refer to those who would be entitled to take under the statute of distributions." Sweet v. Dutton, 109 Mass. 589, 591, and cases therein cited. See, also, Tillman v. Davis, 95 N. Y. 17, 24; Johnson v. K. of H., 53 Ark. 255, 260; Ashton's Estate, 134 Pa. St. 390, 395; Evans' Estate, 155 Pa. St. 646, 649; Schouler on Wills, section 542.

By taking this view effect is given to the manifest intention of the testator, a result which all courts seek to accomplish if possible.

The decree will be reversed, with costs, and the cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with the foregoing opinion. It is so ordered.

Reversed.

Note—Negotiability—Definite Amount.

The Supreme Court of Minnesota held, in the case of Loring v. Anderson, that it is an essential condition of a promissory note that there be no uncertainty as to the amount of money that it calls for at any particular time, but if the promise be to pay a stated sum of money, plus or minus a definite amount or discount, the amount called for by the note is certain, and that a written instrument whereby the maker promised to pay on October 1, 1903, to the order of the payee, $250 with interest, a discount of 6 per cent to be allowed if paid on or before October 1, 1903, was not uncertain as to amount, and was a promissory note and therefore negotiable.

HENRY B. F. MACFARLAND ET AL., COMMISSIONERS, ETC., APPELLANTS,

v.

LORIN M. SAUNDERS.

PRACTICE; VOID ORDER OR DECREE; POWER OF COURT TO VACATE.

1. A court has power to open or vacate a judgment or decree after the expiration of one or more terms, if such judgment or decree be void.
2. Where exceptions filed to the verdict of the jury in a street extension proceeding were overruled by the court, and an order passed confirming the verdict and award, such order is void, for the reason that the filing of the exceptions made if necessary for the municipal authorities, if they desired to proceed with the work, to cause the summoning of a second jury, as required by sec. 263, R. S. D. C., and being void, the court has power, notwithstanding the lapse of one or more terms, to vacate and set it aside, in so far as it affects the lands of the party excepting.

No. 1495. Decided April 18, 1905.

APPEAL by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia from an order of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, sitting as a District Court (District Court, No. 555), vacating an order confirming a verdict, etc., in re extension of Sherman avenue. Affirmed.

Mr. A. B. Duvall and Mr. A. Leftwich Sinclair for the appellants.

Mr. Leo Simmons for the appellee.

Mr. Justice DUELL delivered the opinion of the Court:

This is an appeal by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia from an order made by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, sitting as a District Court, setting aside, vacating, and annulling an order confirming a verdict, award, and assessment in re extension and widening of Sherman avenue, entered and filed October 2, 1901.

The record discloses that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia were directed by section 5 of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1899, entitled "An act for the extension of Pennsylvania avenue southeast, and for other purposes" (30 Stat. 1381), to institute by a petition in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, sitting as a District Court, a proceeding to condemn the land necessary for the extension and widening of Sherman avenue from Florida avenue to Whitney avenue with the uniform width of 100 feet.

Agreeable to the provisions of said act, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, on the 31st day of May, 1899, filed a petition in the Supreme Court of said District, sitting as a district court, praying that the court direct the marshal of the District of Columbia to summon a jury of seven judicious, disinterested men, not related to any party interested, to be and appear on the premises on a day specified, to assess the damages, if any, which each owner of land through which Sherman avenue was to be extended and widened would sustain by reason of such extension and widening, and that such other and further orders might be made and proceedings had as were contemplated by said act of Congress and by Chapter XI of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia, to the end that a permanent right of way for the public over the aforesaid land might be obtained and secured for the extension and widening of Sherman avenue.

Upon consideration of this petition the said court, on the 16th day of September, 1899, passed an order requiring all persons interested to appear in said court on or before the 2d day of October, 1899, and show cause why the prayer of said petition should not be granted and why the proceeding directed in said act of Congress should not be taken. Pursuant to such order a jury was summoned, impaneled, and sworn, and thereafter proceeded in accordance with the provisions of said Chapter XI of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia; and having been upon the premises, the said jury, on the 1st day of May, 1900, made out their written verdict, which was signed by a majority of the jurors, and on the 9th day of May, 1900, said verdict was filed in said court.

After this verdict was filed, but before any action was taken on it by the court, the act of March 3, 1899, under which the proceedings were being had, was held by this court to be unconstitutional. Wight v. Davidson, 16 Appl. D. C. 371: 28 Wash. Law Rep. 302. From such decision an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, which, in May, 1901, handed down its decision holding that the act was constitutional. Wight v. Davidson, 181 U. S. 371: 29 Wash. Law Rep. 290. Thereupon proceedings were resumed in the Supreme Court of the District and an order nisi confirming the verdict and requiring all interested parties to appear and show cause on a day certain why such verdict should not be finally ratified and confirmed by the court. In response to such order this appellee on July 22, 1901, filed the exceptions to the verdict which will later on be referred to. An order, after argument by counsel, and consideration by the court, was entered overruling the exceptions and finally ratifying and confirming the verdict, award, and assessment in all respects. From this order an appeal was taken by appellee to this court October 22, 1901. For reasons unnecessary to be stated the appeal was not prosecuted by this appellee, who, however, on October 13, 1903, filed a motion in the cause praying that the order of October 2, 1901, confirming the verdict in so far as it affected his property be set aside and vacated, and for such other and further relief as the nature of the case might require. The petition upon which the motion was based purports to have been verified July 23, 1903. At the time of filing the motion notice was given the counsel for the District that the court would be asked on October 15, 1903, to dispose of the exceptions, and the clerk of the court was requested to enter the appeal in the case as withdrawn. The motion came on for hearing, and, after argument, the court below, on August 16, 1904, decreed that the judgment or decree of October 2, 1901, be vacated and annulled, in so far, and only so far, as it applied and affected the assessments for benefits against the lands belonging to the appellee. The decree contained this proviso: "This decree, however, to be without prejudice to any right the petitioners, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, may have to proceed further, under and in accordance with the opinion of the Court of Appeals, in the cases of Brown et al. vs. Macfarland et al., and Todd et al. vs. Macfarland et al., which appeals were taken from said decree of October 2, 1901."

The assignment of errors upon which this appeal is to be considered are as follows:

1. In not overruling and denying the petition or motion filed by appellee on October 13, 1903.

2. In holding that the order passed on the 2d day of October, 1901, confirming the verdict of the jury, was null and void.

3. In vacating and setting aside said order in so far as it affected the appellee's property.

4. In declaring the assessments levied against appellee's property illegal, null, and void.

These exceptions in reality present but one question for our consideration, and that is as to the power of the court below to vacate the order of October 2, 1901. If that order be held to be void it will be found to be unnecessary to consider certain questions raised by appellants as to the laches of the appellee, and the effect of appellee's alleged collection of the damages awarded him in these very proceedings. In any event, however, the latter question need not be passed on, for the record is silent on the subject and we can not go outside of it. As to the question of laches it seems to be conceded by appellants that a court has power after the expiration of one or more terms at which a judgment or decree was entered to open or vacate it if such judgment or decree be void. If, therefore, the order or decree herein which was vacated and set aside was void, by reason of the absolute right of appellee to have a new jury summoned, should he so elect, and he properly exercised and made known his desire by filing his exceptions, then this case is within narrow bounds. In view of the prior decisions of this court relating to the very same order or decree of October 2, 1901, we are constrained to hold that the court below committed no error in making the decree or order of August 16, 1904, which is here complained of.

In Brown v. Macfarland, 19 Appl. D. C. 525: 30 Wash. Law. Rep. 235, this court, in referring to the very same proceedings in which the decree or order of October 2, 1901, was entered, said: "The whole proceeding is strictly statutory, and it must be affirmatively shown that all the provisions of the statutes that apply to the proceedings have been substantially complied with. Otherwise the whole proceeding would be void and without effect." Were all the provisions of such statutes substantially complied with? If not under the authority of the case last referred to we must hold that the decree or order of October 2, 1901, was not merely voidable, but void, by reason of the fact that is not controverted that a second jury of twelve was not summoned as required by the statute applicable to the proceeding. The facts being as stated, we find that the court has clearly stated the fatality of the omission to summon the jury in Brown v. Macfarland, supra, which was followed in Todd v. Macfarland, 20 Appls. D. C. 177: 30 Wash. Law Rep. 423. In the latter case the court quoted, with approval, what had been said in the former, "that upon the filing of the exceptions to such verdict" (being the same verdict to which this appellee filed his exceptions) "it at once became the duty of the authorities, if they desired to proceed in the work of condemnation, to order the marshal to summon a jury of twelve, as directed by section 263 of chapter 11, Rev. Stats. United States, relating to this District; and that there was no duty resting upon the exceptants to demand a jury of twelve to be summoned, but it was the duty of the Commissioners to take such action." That being so, this appellee, having filed his exceptions, was under no obligation to do more. No second jury having been caused to be summoned by the Commissioners, the decree or order of October 2, 1901, could not be enforced against this appellee, and no laches could be predicated against him, no matter how long he waited. He could move to vacate it at any time, or he could wait until an attempt was made to enforce it, and then resist such enforcement so far as it related to his property. For the reasons stated, and upon the authorities cited, the decree was void against this appellee.

A question has been raised as to the sufficiency of the exceptions filed by appellee to entitle him to put upon the Commissioners the burden of having summoned the second jury. Upon examination of the exceptions we find them the same as those filed in Todd v. Macfarland, supra, and we consider their sufficiency has been affirmed by the action of this court.

A further consideration of the contentions of the appellants seems unnecessary. The court below in vacating the former decree reserved the right of the Commissioners to take such further proceedings in the matter in accordance with the opinions of this court in the cases heretofore referred to by us.

In our opinion no error was committed by the court below in vacating the order of October 2, 1901, and the order of August 16, 1904, must therefore be affirmed, with costs. And it is so ordered. Affirmed.
